King Exits

500,000 Attend Festival

"And that's King Neptune," fathers and mothers whispered to their children as the King and his court recently strolled along the Virginia Beach boardwalk.

"Did he really come from the sea," mystified youngsters asked. "Does he have to go back? Try to make him stay!"

But he can't stay. King Neptune must lay away his crown and return to the sea, or in this case a doctor's office, for another year. The Eighth Annual Virginia Beach Chamber of Commerce Neptune Festival is virtually over now, but not before being heralded as one of the best festivals ever.

This year's festival elapsed 10 days, and was attended by well over half a million people. Virginia Beach City Councilman and former Mayor, Dr. Clarence A. Holland, presided as the quintessential monarch of the Neptune Festival, King Neptune. Replete with the pageantry and splendor which accompanies the position, Holland exercised his divine rule as the ceremonial head of festival activities, but that role was transcended by his obvious bias for his younger subjects.

The Neptune Festival will close with a final post-festival volkswarsch on Saturday, Oct. 10 and Sunday, Oct. 11. This is the sixth year for the volkswarsch, which will begin at the Officer's Club at Fort Story and proceed through Seashore State Park. It is open to the public. The marches will begin at 7:30 a.m. each day and conclude at 1 p.m.

Volunteers Keep Trails Open

Parks commissioner Ben H. Bolen is pleased to announce that Seashore State Park hiking trails will remain open due to strong statewide response following a recent appeal for volunteer assistance.

Most picnic areas, originally scheduled to close October 1, and the visitor center at Grayson Highlands State Park, will stay open on weekends through the end of October.

Since the appeal for volunteers, Seashore State Park has received over 200 responses, helping to make it the first state park to put into motion a full fledged volunteer program. The trails there will stay open through the winter. The picnic area, visitor center and the 64th Street boat ramp will remain open until November 30.

"The public's response to our call for volunteers has been truly gratifying to me," Commissioner Bolen said, adding, "It demonstrates that Virginians are not only concerned about continued access to their outdoor heritage, but that they are ready, willing and able to rally together and get the job done."

Previously announced delayed springtime park facility openings will also change, Bolen said. With continued volunteer assistance, most public park offerings will open according to usual schedules.

For more information about volunteering in state parks, contact your local state park or the Division of Parks, 1201 Washington Building, Capitol Square, Richmond, Virginia 23219, telephone: 804/786-2132.

Windsor's Wives Set

The Performing Arts Unit of the Virginia Beach Department of Parks and Recreation has announced the opening of its '81-'82 season with Shakespeare's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" at the Virginia Beach Recreation Center/Kempville Theatre, Oct. 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, and 17 at 7:30 p.m. and Oct. 11 and 18 at 3 p.m.

This delightful farce was written hastily in 1597 by the bard for the celebration of the investiture of the Order of the Garter. This play is a study of the middle class social order in the gay, prosperous community of Windsor. Writing about the faults and foibles of his own Britain, Shakespeare is at his funniest, with the famous Sir John Falstaff embroiled in passion and revenge with Mistress Ford, Mistress Page, and their jealous husbands. Dramatic illusion and reality are constantly overlapped with disguises, accidents, and general fantastic tomfoolery.

Tickets for the performances are $2 with children under five years old admitted free. Those presenting a valid facility use card will receive a 50 percent discount. The box office will be open daily, from noon until 7 p.m. to purchase tickets. For reservations and information, call 495-1892.

Lite-A-Bike

Reflective tape will be applied in a "Lite-A-Bike" program to be conducted in Virginia Beach by the Veterans of Foreign Wars and its Ladies Auxiliary Post 392.

Tape will be applied to bicycles at Lynnhaven Elementary school, Dillon Drive, Virginia Beach, on Saturday, Oct. 10, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. strips of reflective tape will be put on the rear fender on high-rise bar, handlebars, frame, front forks and wheels of the bicycles, making each bike more visible after dark from all angles. The highly reflective tape, the same as material used in reflective traffic signs and license plates, is visible in the headlights of an automobile. The program places greater emphasis on outlining the shape of the bicycle at night. Drivers will no longer have to guess what spots of reflected light mean. The shape of the bicycle at night will closely resemble its shape in daylight.

"Youngsters shouldn't be out bike riding after dark, but if they are, their bikes should have reflective tape," said Commander Henry E. Chaney, director of the local "Lite-A-Bike" program.

Four out of five fatal bike accidents occur after dark. "The extra warning provided by reflective tape can help save a child's life."

In addition to applying tape, V.F.W. members will inspect the bikes for proper equipment: Horn or other signaling device, headlight, rear reflector and functioning brakes.

More than 25 million bikes across the nation have been made safer with reflective tape by more than 8,000 V.F.W. Posts participating in this program. Endorsed by the National Safety Council, the Lite-A-Bike program uses reflective tape produced by 3M Company.

There are no fees, so keep the children in our community safe.

26 Questions - A to Z Evans Vs. Sciortino

By Greg Goldfarb,
Sun editor

Twenty-six questions—A to Z asks the same 26 questions to both candidates seeking the Virginia Beach's Commonwealth's Attorney seat. The office has an annual budget exceeding $800,000 and pays its chief prosecutor between $44,000 and $62,000 a year.

Andre Evans is the 11 year Democratic incumbent. He is a 23 year Virginia Beach resident and a graduate of the University of North Carolina. He served in the U.S. Army, 1956 through 1960, and honorably discharged as a captain, judge advocate General's Corps. He has served as president of the Virginia Association of Commonwealth's Attorneys, and of the Virginia Beach Bar Association. He is author of "The Investigator in Court, Criminal and Investigative Handbook" (to be published by McGraw-Hill this year). Evans 48 is married, 24 years, and has two sons. He is a deacon, First Presbyterian Church.

Beach attorney, and former deputy commonwealth's attorney Paul A. Sciortino, 52 is Evans' Republican challenger. Sciortino, former head of the Major Offender's Bureau of the commonwealth's attorney office, is a 14 year Virginia Beach resident and a graduate of St. John's University School of Law, Brooklyn, N.Y. Sciortino served in the Navy, 1946 through 1950, and was a special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation from 1951 through 1957. Sciortino holds master's degrees in criminal justice and public administration. He has served on several legal education panels and local and state legal bars. Sciortino is divorced, and past chairman parish council, St. Nicholas Catholic Church.

The following responses were offered by the candidates to these questions:

LABOR: Are employee grievances in the commonwealth's attorney's office properly aired and remedied?

E: By agreement with the city manager, our employees come under the city's grievance procedures. The city has a fine merit and promotion system; raises are given in step increases.

S: Clerks and the office manager are, I believe, designated appointees under the city's plan, thus excluding them from the grievance procedure. The employees of that office don't get too involved with personnel matters. Usually labor problems are handled between the party and the commonwealth's attorney.

MAYOR: If the city were to change from the City Manager-City Council to the Mayor-City Council form of government, would it affect the commonwealth's attorney's office?

E: My only concern would be who would I deal with? If a strong mayor was elected, I'd deal with him. If not, I'd deal with the city manager. I've never worked under a strong mayor, only with a city manager system. And that situation has been satisfactory for me.

S: I hope not. It would depend on the rapport I developed with whoever was mayor or city manager.

NARCOTICS: How can the use of narcotics in Virginia Beach be curtailed?

E: The public must have programs that attack narcotics at all levels. I know our third precinct has cooperated with a federal grand jury at very high levels. Our police officers do a competent job at handling our part of the narcotic spectrum with the amount of resources they have.

Evans

S: I was working here 11 years ago when the big drug problem first came on the scene in the 1960 and 70's. It has never been curtailed, and we see the same thing today as we did before. The commonwealth's attorney needs to sit down with the police and develop a game-plan and spend money going for the big drug pushers.

OPPOSITION: What do you think of your opposition?

People Don't Know What Attorney Does, Candidates Note

E: We're both about the same age, although he's four years older. We're both trial lawyers, although I have more experience. I've been a trial lawyer for 25 years, including 10 before I was ever elected to public office. He is involved in the day to day treatment of cases, as I am, but in addition I'm involved with administration and management, which is very time consuming but important. My temperament is different. It is my effort to be stable and create an environment conducive to good work. He has tendencies to insult judges, both circuit and lower court. I have never violated the Freedom of Information Act, but he has by attending a midnight meeting in a local businessman's office. He divulged confidences given him by high ranking police officials. I can be trusted. The public has no reason to feel they can't trust me, but I wonder if the public can trust him? After I gave him a job for 11 years, gave his status, now he feels he knows more about the job than I do. His ability is limited, or else why would I have promoted someone else to his old job?

S: He has a tendency to be more aloof. He is not very accessible and prone not to recognize hard work on a daily basis. He tends to have meetings when there are other things that need to be correcting. He criticizes more than he praises. Maybe he believes familiarity breeds contempt. I believe a leader can mingle with his staff and that they should be praised for hard work as much as they're chewed out for bad work. He must have an officer mentality because he doesn't like to mix with the ranks. I was just an enlisted man.

POPULARITY: Is the commonwealth's attorney's office perceived by the public as a popular office to hold?

E: Most people don't know what the commonwealth's attorney's office is. Maybe one out of a hundred knows what the commonwealth's attorney does. It's difficult to say the office is popular; there's a lack of information about the office. It serves an extremely vital function, but is no popularity contest. In fact, sometimes victims aren't happy with us because we're the ones who make them come to court.

S: Most people don't know what the office is, or what the commonwealth attorney does. It's been like that since I've been here and that's bad, since it could be the most visible of all constitutional offices. His assistants could be used to explain more to the community about the workings of the office.

QUALIFICATIONS: What are yours for the office?

E: First you need to be an attorney. A member of the state legal bar. Plus be an experienced trial attorney, and be an administrator.

S: Be an attorney primarily. He should be an experienced trial lawyer with an administrative background. Ninety-six percent of the time the office has been gained in a popularity contest. In 200 years, Democrats have controlled Virginia. Then, the position called for a good party man with a law degree. I have two master's degrees, in support of my law degree.

REVERSE POLICE BRUTALITY: Will mandatory jail-time for people convicted of assaulting police officers deter future attacks?

E: It would help. But if an officer is undercover, I don't know. That's a different thing.

S: I have tried any number of assault on

Attorney Must Withstand Stress, Candidates Say

STRESS: How does the commonwealth's attorney deal with stress associated with the office?
E: You must keep your emotions under control. I've demonstrated I can do that; unlike some people I know. We are all subject to stress in the commonwealth's attorney's office, because we never know what's coming next. You must roll with the punches, and not bend under pressure.

S: There is much stress in the preparation of the day's work. But most of the people I've worked with are up to it and capable of handling it. I'm not aware that the job causes nervous breakdowns in any of my colleagues.

TIME: How much time must be devoted to the office of commonwealth's attorney?

E: Ever since 1975, before a law change, the assistant's jobs were not full time. I got my opponent an $11,000 a year raise, and he was very appreciative at the time. Some commonwealth's attorney's people work on Sundays, which is a good time to work because no distractions leads itself to creativity.

S: A very demanding job. I'll work from at least 8 to 8:30 a.m. to 5 or 5:30 p.m. I've gone all day in court. The commonwealth's attorney must stay as long as the judge want's him.

UNVEILING: Would you unveil any new programs or innovations for the commonwealth's office in the future?

E: I've been unveiling programs over the last 14 years that I have been in office, and anticipate to continue to do so in the future as it becomes necessary. I feel it is very important to maintain and strengthen our existing programs, such as the victim/witness program, the major offender's bureau, and welfare fraud. There is always room for improvement for these programs, and of course we're always entertaining new ideas for programs also.

S: No comment.

VICTORY: What has been the biggest victory of your legal career?

E: The Harris case. He received double life sentences, plus years in jail.

S: An arson case. I got a three year conviction on an allegedly upright and respectable community man. One of my witnesses was an ex-felon.

WANT: How bad do you want the job?

E: I've invested 15 years of my life in the job. You don't spend your most productive years doing something you don't think is worthy and worthwhile. You don't readily give up a position when you're the best qualified to handle the job in the foreseeable future.

S: Not bad enough to compromise any of my principles for. I mean, I wouldn't make promises for the job that I couldn't keep. I think I can do a good job, and I never realized how many supporters I had until I announced that I intended to run for the office. I never dreamed I'd have so much support. I hope to win at least for them.

XECB: What is an xebec? (A three masted Mediterranean sailing ship with long overhanging bow and stern).

E: I have no idea.

S: I couldn't guess.

YOUTH: Are there enough anti-crime efforts and program directed at today's youths?

E: I am very concerned about youth crime. In fact, we keep a very heavy speaking school schedule in the spring, and enjoy talking to local high and junior high kids. I get called back every year to speak, sometimes to as many as six classes in one day.

S: We need to get more youths involved in activities at a community level, and remember that youth sports is more than little league. That's good, but little league sometimes leaves out kids who have no place to turn but to the streets. We need for them to develop a healthy respect for each other. Neighborhood parks and schools, with volunteer help, could be one answer to curtailing youth crime. Get senior citizens to help. Also, there is no facility for kids who aren't really cut out for public school, and have been in trouble with the law. They end up on correctional farms or prison because there are no educational or psychiatric places to send them.

ZONE: Need the zone, or boundaries of the commonwealth's attorney's office need to be expanded or retracted within the city government framework?

E: We are accessible to all other departments, and seem happy with the present relation of the office to the community and the municipal center.

S: We need no change. What roads the office takes depends on the commonwealth's attorney, and what he perceives his responsibility to be.

ADDITIONAL OBSERVATIONS OR COMMENTS:

E: I'm not bitter toward my opponent, he has every right to run against me. Although it's something I could not have done. I could not oppose a man who put bread on my table for 11 years. There's more to being commonwealth's attorney, than going to court everyday, and that's all he can say he has done.

S: No comment.

New Resort Strip Parking Plans Begin Next Year

The City of Virginia Beach has a resort area parking plan which will go into effect on April 1. If it works, the next step will be the beautification of Atlantic Avenue.

That consists of placing underground-water, sewer, electric and telephone lines.

The City Council committee which recommended the plan, was appointed after Council turned down a proposal of City Manager George L. Hanbury to one-waying Atlantic and Pacific Avenues.

The plan calls for:

- The removal of all parking from Atlantic Avenue except in the Loop area.
- The installation of left turn storage lanes.
- Refining signage.
- Installation of lead green at all west turn lights.
- Providing police and traffic control as necessary.
- Providing two-way traffic at 19th and Atlantic.
- Improving Ninth Street through to Birdneck Road.
- If left turn storage lands do not prove to be sufficient, then signalization should be increased.
- Permitting unlimited loading zones in Atlantic from midnight to 1 p.m.

• Beautification, using as a guide the design in 1981-82, the bid in 1982-83 and the construction in 1983-84.

Council discussed using revenue sharing funds in connection with the beautification in executive session.

Hanbury said he could not recommend improvements until Council is comfortable with the traffic pattern, but lines will have to go underground no matter what plan is used, he said.

He said when the construction to put utilities underground is started, the Council will hear objections from innkeepers because it will be a year-long program and the area will be a "total chaos."

The unlimited loading will be for commercially-identified vehicles. If station wagons are used for loading they also will have to be identified, Councilman Clarence A. Holland said. Holland served on the committee with Councilman W. H. Kitchin, III, Hanbury, Public Works Director, C. O. Lambert, Jr. and Traffic Engineer, J. W. Herzke.

Beach Gets New Station

Virginia Beach will have its own FM radio station, WNRN (Winner in Virginia Beach) with the construction of a tower and facilities by Payne of Virginia, Inc., operators of Chesapeake AM Radio Station WCPK.

Charles Payne, company president, expects the station to be on the air in a couple of months.

The station will be the only one in operation licensed for Virginia Beach. AM Station WVAB went off the air last year.

The Chesapeake Industrial Development Authority has approved a $5 million Industrial Development loan to finance the expansion of Payne activities.

Virginia Beach City Council Monday afternoon concurred with the action of the Chesapeake Authority, a procedure required by law before the funds can be advanced.

Payne said WNRN will be a 50,000 watts station, comparable with the strongest in the area, and will serve Southeastern Virginia and northeastern North Carolina. The station also will be known as Beach 95."

Construction will be done in phased development.

Water Contracts Approved

Water contracts with the cities of Norfolk and Suffolk, approved by Virginia Beach City Council Monday afternoon, will cost Virginia Beach dearly.

What makes the contracts easier to live with, Mayor Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr. said, is that "I still feel it's only for 10 years." By that time the city expects to have another source of water, possibly from the Aptomattox River.

The agreements will cost the city approximately $800,000 which translates into two cents more per 1000 gallons of water for Beach customers. That's not counting the $15 million, 48-inch pipeline which will transport the water from Suffolk. The line will be built by Norfolk, owned by Norfolk, but paid for by Virginia Beach.

Reader Attacks Writers' Bias In Political Editorial

Editor:

Your editorial of Sept. 23, 1981, as I read it is a very unfair and biased article in making your comparisons between Mr. Coleman and Mr. Robb. Your article remarks that Mr. Coleman will work hard to implement President Reagan's programs is much propaganda. It would require our Assembly for this.

I've heard and been told by educated, decent people, that the Republicans are all for the rich and President Reagan's recent actions and turnarounds prove that some of the plans his advisors wished to implement were detrimental to the people as a whole.

Your duty is to report things as they honestly are, not to make propaganda.

Evans Is Right Man

Editor:

After reading the September 30 interview with incumbent commonwealths attorney Andre Evans and Paul A. Sciortino, it is my conclusion that Mr. Evans, with his candor and experience, is best suited to serve the citizens of Virginia Beach.

I am of the opinion that local elections should not be predicated on party affiliation; rather more emphasis should be given to the merits and qualifications of the perspective candidate.

Andre Evans' past record shows both concern and involvement for our city.

Prevent Arthritis

Editor:

Many people think diagnosis is the easiest part of a physician's job. But for some diseases, the diagnosis is as difficult as the treatment. Totally different diseases can have the same symptoms. Rheumatic diseases such as systemic lupus erythematosus and juvenile arthritis are good examples of hard-to-diagnose conditions.

Since many forms of arthritis are systemic—that is, affecting the entire body—they can present a bewildering range of symptoms. The medical team may need to work with the patient for weeks or months and experiment with different treatments and medications before the pattern of the specific disease can be identified.

Fortunately, our ability to diagnose the different kinds of arthritis is becoming more and more precise. Newly-developed laboratory tests are helping to pin-point the presence of lupus and rheumatoid arthritis, x-ray and ultrasound technology are giving us accurate pictures of what is happening in the body's joints and systems, and we now know that certain genetic signposts are present in many forms of the disease.

Early diagnosis and prompt, proper medical treatment can prevent much of the pain and destruction of arthritis. If you would like more information about arthritis and its warning signs, contact the Tidewater Branch of the Arthritis Foundation in Norfolk.

The Columbian Connection

Mother ships full of South America drugs steam to U.S. Cities

Much of the marijuana and cocaine entering Virginia Beach comes from Columbia, South America.

It's journey to Virginia Beach begins in the Columbian mountains, where the cannabis is grown in fields covering thousands of acres of Columbian rich soil. After harvest, the marijuana is carried overland usually to a port or loading dock in northern Columbia.

Bale upon bale of the grass is loaded on large mother ships, usually under government eyes, at a marketplace value of $10 a pound. The grass is considered a cash crop by most Columbians, just as Americans accept the exportation of grain.

Mother ships leave the Columbian coast one, two, three or more at a time. Sometimes decoy ships are sent out to distract watchful eyes. For years, much of the mother ship's load was dumped in Florida, but increased U.S. Customs, and Drug Enforcement Administration presence has shifted much of the illicit business north. Exact drop-off and pick-up points are prearranged by Columbian exporters and American importers. These people take few risks, and put up all the money. The boats which venture in to the international waters to meet the mother ships, earn roughly $100,000 to cover the captain's salary, crew, and expenses.

Mother boats travel the 2,500 mile trip in a 22 day round trip. They stagger their courses, and reportedly keep away from Cuba. "Fidel's boys don't like boats of any kind along Cuba's coast for any reason," said Robert Schmehl, a Virginia Beach narcotics detective.

So, once past Cuba, a mother ship steams toward America carrying 100 tons of high-grade marijuana, worth $20 million dollars. To keep discreet, oftentimes the vessels switch name plates while out at sea, change identification numbers, and paint false waterlines to confuse surveillance attempts. And, of course, as with most multi-million dollar operations, this one has contingency plans in case of danger. Usually these plans consist of blood and destruction.

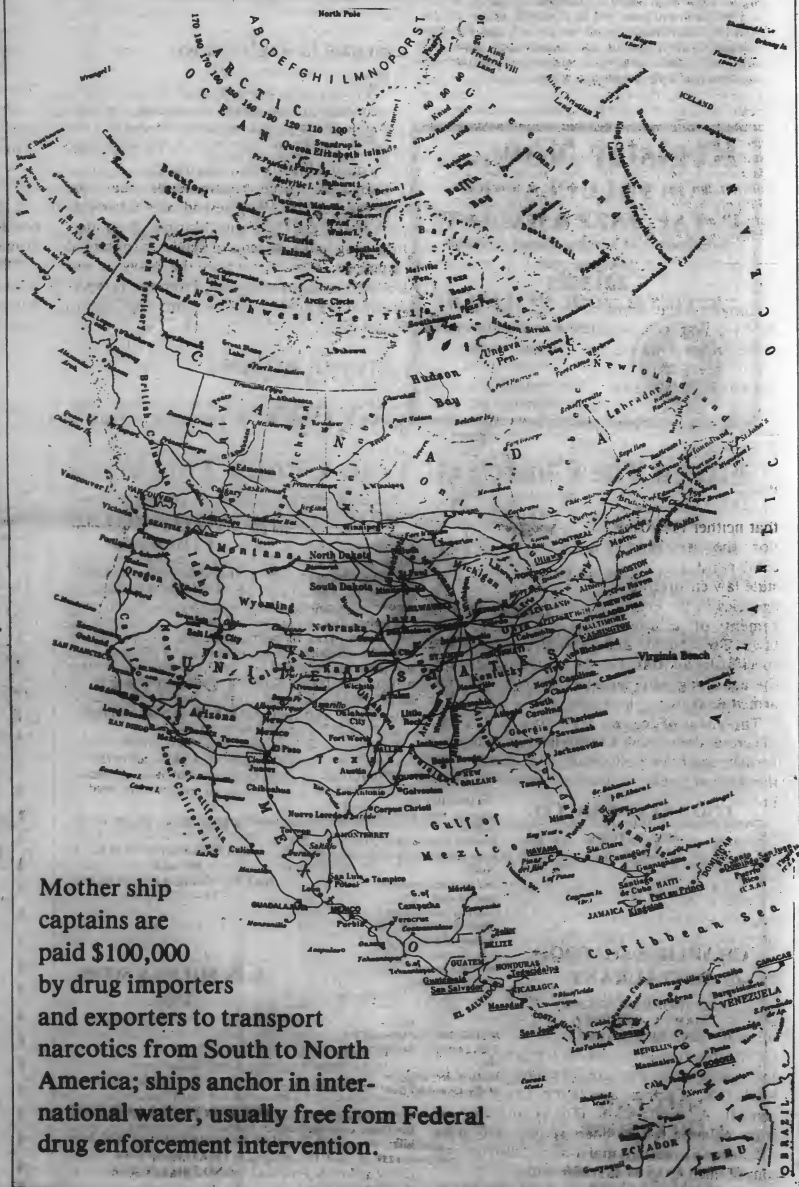

Once along the United States coast, mother ships contact daughter ships and begin dropping off 10 to 20 tons of dope at a time. It's estimated that a ship can pick up 20 tons of grass from a mother ship and leave the scene within seven to eight hours. A ship carrying 10 tons of grass needs only an inland draft of eight foot to dock and unload.

The daughter ships then slip into any one of numerous inlets and waterways along the East Coast and unload the dope for later distribution.

If for some reason the mother and sister ship have to delay the pick-up, they simply cruise around until the coast is clear and then make the transaction.

It is estimated that for every daughter ship that is caught by drug officials, another 15 get inland undetected.

How The Connection Works

Mother ship captains are paid $100,000 by drug importers and exporters to transport narcotics from South to North America; ships anchor in international water, usually free from Federal drug enforcement intervention.

Chasing The Dragon/The Columbian Connection . . . Sun Investigative Series

Task Force Recommends Amendment

One Act Protects Multitudes Of Drug Smugglers

Editor's note: This article begins a Virginia Beach Sun three-part series entitled "Chasing The Dragon/The Columbian Connection." The first installment of the series discusses how illicit drug enter Virginia Beach, and how an outdated Congressional Act is aiding international drug smugglers. Next week's installment will feature reactions to the Virginia Beach drug problem from a Federal Drug Enforcement Administration official, and a Coast Guard commander, plus a look at the working relation between Beach narcotics agents and their informants. The concluding installment will center on allegations that people feloniously convicted of drug possession or distribution are handed suspended sentences by Virginia Beach judges "like it was going out of style," and how Virginia Beach P.T.A.'s contribute in the war against drugs.

By Greg Goldfarb,
Sun Editor

Congressional legislation, enacted during the Civil War, is making life miserable for narcotics officers across the country. And nowhere are the act's outdated restrictions more painfully realized than in Virginia Beach.

The Posse Comitatus Act, passed in 1863, maintains that neither the Army nor the Air Force shall assist local and state law enforcement agencies in the enforcement of criminal law. The Navy and Marines were not specifically addressed in the act, but abided by the act along with the other branches of the armed services.

The intent of the act, according to Virginia Beach resident Frank Carrington, an attorney, former narcotics policeman, and member of the United States Attorney General's Task Force on Violent Crime, was "to prevent Union soldiers from chasing runaway slaves." Obviously such an act has no validity in the 1980's, and Attorney General William French Smith's task force has recommended the act be amended by Congressional actions. The proposal, however, is only one of 64 task force proposals presented to Smith, and it is uncertain which proposals he will attempt to perpetuate.

Drug smuggling is the key topic in 1981 discussions over amending the Posse Comitatus Act. As it stands now, according to Carrington, the Army and Air Force have taken the position that they are forbidden by law to alert U.S. Custom agents or Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) officials to trans-Atlantic freight liners spotted 150 miles offshore in international waters, distributing tons of illicit drugs to daughter ships.

The task force recommends in its report, which was submitted to Smith only three weeks ago, that military planes flying routine flights be allowed to report obvious narcotics activities, such as numerous daughter ships leaving a mother ship, to the DEA and other drug enforcement agencies.

"We didn't recommend that special flights be conducted to catch or search for the smugglers," Carrington said, "report only cases where they spot obvious narcotics activity during their routine flights."

The task force recommends that the Secretary of the Navy resend age-old orders prohibiting the Navy and Marines from alerting drug enforcement officials to potential smugglers. An idea which the Navy is not likely to look favorably on; from the perspective that it would be another duty for them to perform.

Drug Financiers

$30,000 Yields $45,000 For Some

You sense a feeling of urgent desperation in Bruce Benson's voice.

"You can't compare the drug problems of yesterday with today," Benson, a seven-year Virginia Beach narcotics detective said. "What we're dealing with today are drug smugglers with unlimited resources. Our vice and narcotics squad just doesn't have the manpower or resources to stop the drug flow into Virginia Beach."

Virginia Beach used to be known as a city of drug users, said Wray Boswell, a two year Virginia Beach narcotics detective, "most of them under the age of 26. But there has evolved a segment of people who started making $200,000 to $300,000 a year off selling illicit drugs. This has led today to prominent Virginia Beach businessmen who lead out $30,000 in cold cash and receive $45,000 in return a few weeks later."

Virginia Beach narcotics detectives are currently engaged in what they sparingly call a major conspiracy. "We're making good headway, but it's very slow, tedious work to document all the evidence we need," Benson said.

Implicated in the investigation are at least 40 to 50 major characters with a supporting cast of almost 200.

Benson and Boswell report that Virginia Beach has a very definite drug problem, especially with cocaine and heroin use in the upper-middle and upper class Virginia Beach.

"That ain't no crap what you see in '60 Minutes,'" Benson said. "Much cocaine comes out of South America. It comes from the Columbian and cocaine cowboys, which is a mix of Cuban and Columbian government officials. And believe me, that stuff hits this area."

Benson said oceanic freight liners called "mother ships" regularly leave from the northern coast of Columbia in South America en route to various off-shore ports of call from Florida, north.

"Those ships have very sophisticated radar, sonar, and communications equipment," Benson said. "They're owned by men who have unlimited resources. They won't hesitate to ditch a new airplane, or scuttle a boat and crew of danger approaches. Crews have been killed on several occasions."

Boswell said the narcotics squad needs more manpower and money to cover Virginia Beach's 30 miles of shoreline.

The act also addresses other criminal activities, such as terrorism, and Carrington predicts if Smith pushes the proposal before the necessary Office of Legal Counsel, it will be looked upon favorably by the Congress and the White House.

"I don't expect he will act on all 64 recommendations," Carrington said. "We'll just have to wait to see if he chooses the Posse Comitatus Act."

Carrington said it is accurate to state this one act is unwillfully protecting multitudes of drug smugglers.

"Clearly Custom agents can arrest them as soon as they're on the shoreline," Carrington noted, "but I'm not sure who would, or could make arrests out of territorial boundaries."

"We could control the major drug industry in Virginia Beach if we had more manpower and resources," he said. "We get tips from people, but it really takes more than that."

Currently in Virginia Beach, according to Benson and Boswell, there is more cocaine and heroin in the city than demand for it.

"We have a bad heroin problem here," Benson said. "Members of the upper-middle class and upper class are addicted to chasing the dragon. That's where the addict puts the heroin on tin foil, fires it up from underneath and inhales the fumes through a straw. There are doctors and lawyers in Virginia Beach strung out on it."

Benson also said that they never hear about cocaine parties where the white stuff is distributed in containers the size of kitchen mixing bowls, until the party's over.

Virginia Beach has eight narcotic officers, compared to Norfolk, for example, with 27. Benson and Boswell said the word on the street is to come to Virginia Beach if you want to sell drugs.

Beach Police Chiefs Admit Help Is Needed

By Greg Goldfarb,

Administratively, the Virginia Beach Police Department confesses its vice and narcotics squad could use more help.

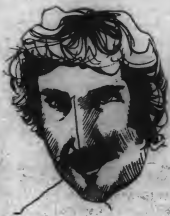

"The administration is cognizant of the drug problem of Tidewater and in Virginia Beach," said Virginia Beach Police Captain C. D. Hathaway, "and we're always looking within to see if our resources are allocated properly. We are understaffed in the vice and narcotics department. By allocation, we should have nine detectives. We're one short. But the department also has other positions to fill."

Hathaway said that the addition of one detective probably will not affect the drug problem at the Beach, but that "we need to access the situation from all aspects."

Hathaway also notes, "look at all the resources Federal drug people have, and I don't see that they've made an apprecipitate dent in the problem."

Hathaway said the department is planning next year's budget now, and is preparing to budget for an increase in the vice and narcotics division, but indicates that already $180,000 goes each year just for narcotics detective's salaries.

Virginia Beach police chief W. W. Davis, and incoming chief Charles F. Wall both agree that Virginia Beach will have to take measures to fight the drug influx into Virginia Beach, but also add that the police cannot be held but so accountable for drug traffic.

"There has been drug smuggling for awhile, and the Coast Guard has been seizing ships," Davis said. "We have asked for increased allocations in the narcotics department, but will have to wait for city council approval."

"But we plan to help curtail the drug problem in Virginia Beach by continuing to work with the drug enforcement agents and the Coast Guard in every way we can. Unfortunately Virginia Beach does not operate its own fleet of ships to look for smugglers. We keep our eyes open and alert the other officials; and investigate ourselves when possible."

Chief Wall, who will assume full responsibility in the chief's office when Davis retires later this year, said "I'm not surprised that the drug flow has picked up here; especially in light of the city's history of a drug problem. If we stop the drugs from coming in here, it just squeezes
the traffic elsewhere."

Wall said there is much cooperation between local, and federal drug officers.

"There's probably more interjurisdictional cooperation in combating drug smuggling than any other area," Wall said. "Especially in a police department such as this, where the officers are so committed to their work."

Solar One Opens

Oceana Area Hosts New Business

Solar One, a local solar collector manufacturer and distributor of energy-saving products, officially opened their new Corporate Headquarters at Seahawk Circle in Ocean view last week on Oct. 1.

Mayor J. Henry Mc-Coy, Jr., and City Manager George L. Han-bury took part in ribbon-cutting ceremonies, according to company
President Dennis Ackerman.

The white, wedge-shaped building, which houses the firm's offices, showroom, manufacturing plant, and warehouse, was designed by Solar One as a unique showcase of energy-efficient techniques and products. It uses extensive insulation, orientation, solar collectors, south facing windows, ground water cooling, ventilation, insulated shades and shutters, earth berming, and special construction techniques to conserve energy.

"The building is the event," Ackerman said.
"We felt the need to demonstrate dramatically how solar energy works, and the benefits it offers."

Ackerman estimates the cost of utilities to heat, cool, light and provide hot water for the 12,000 square foot building will be less per year than for an average home of 2,000 square feet.

Located across from the entrance to Lynnhaven Mall, Solar One's new offices also contain seminar facilities for the study of solar energy and demonstrations on energy-saving methods and materials, which the company will sponsor. Local non-profit groups like the Tidewater Solar Energy Association also use the educational facilities.

Founded in 1975, Solar
One has doubled its business annually and employs 25 people.

Beachers Advised

Take Aspirin, Rest For Back Pain

It can strike without warning, leaving Virginia Beach victims disabled and in chronic pain. Seven million people will be affected by it this year, and eight out of ten Americans will suffer from it in their lifetimes. What is it? Back Pain.

Yet despite its prevalence, not much is really known about the causes of back pain. Sometimes it will hit suddenly, like when lifting a heavy object. Other times it develops so gradually it is difficult to pinpoint exactly when the trouble begins. But one thing is known for sure - back pain can be torturing.

Perhaps the best thing to do when back pain first strikes is to take some aspirin and get some bed rest. As international back pain expert, Dr. Alf Nachemson of Sweden, pointed out at a recent back pain symposium sponsored by Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, 70 percent of back pain patients will improve by themselves within three weeks, and 90 percent will improve within two months.

It's when back pain becomes chronic that diagnosis becomes tricky. If the pain is due to a herniated or slipped disc, surgery can sometimes help. Yet even the use of surgery is controversial, and may even do more harm than good.

Dr. Thomas L. DeLorme, assistant clinical professor of Orthopedic Surgery at Harvard Medical School and Medical Director of Rehabilitation at Liberty Mutual's new Medical Center explained, "Only when there is a protruding ruptured disc causing unbearable pain and/or muscle weakness is there little dispute about the need for surgery. The further away you get from that situation, the bleaker view you take a surgery."

Other methods of treatment include steroid blocking (injecting an anesthetic and a steroid into different structures related to the disc), prescription painkillers, muscle relaxants and physical therapy. Even exercises should be done under medical supervision, since they can cause more injury if not done properly.

Obviously, the best thing to do is to prevent back problems before they start. Dr. Stever Snook, Ph.D. Project Director - Ergonomics at Liberty Mutual Research Center suggests you can reduce the possibility of back trouble if you remember these guidelines:

Avoid unnecessary bending. Don't place objects on the floor if you know someone will have to lift them again. Instead, ask for a table, bench, or chair to place the objects on.

Avoid unnecessary twisting. When handling an object, it's much better to turn your feet than to twist your trunk. And don't twist and bend at the same time.

Avoid reaching out. Especially when holding heavy objects. Keep the object close to the body. Some studies have suggested this is more important than the way you lift something.

Avoid excessive weights. Don't be afraid to ask for help when lifting heavy objects.

Avoid quick, jerky movements. Lift slowly and smoothly.

Get plenty of exercise. Walking is particularly good, because it requires spinal movements thought to assist in the nutrition of the intervertebral disc. Sit ups (done with the knees bent and feet free) and deep knee bends are also recommended. However, be careful not to do so many deep bends that it aggravates the knees.

Maintain a good diet. Keep your weight down. Cut down on sugar and salt, and try to eat a sufficient amount of fiber.

Perhaps the most important thing to do is to be aware that back pain can strike anytime. So take care of your back - don't aggravate it. Dr. Snook adds, "The back is a marvelous structure. If you treat it well, it will serve you well, for many, many years."

Sports Oriented

Virginia Beach native Terry Snyder is vice president, business systems division, U.S. Sales of Virginia Beach. Yet, she says she's more sports oriented than business.

"I'm not really that career oriented," Terry, 27, said. "I'm more into sports, fun, and exercises."

Terry is a 1972 graduate of First Colonial High School, and has attended college in Miami and New York, studying business and fashion merchandising.

She began working for U.S. Sales at the age of 19.

Terry likes Virginia Beach but plans to move later. "I like the beach and the sun," she said. "I travel much, however, and will probably settle somewhere else."

Military, Drug Experts See More Pot At Beach

Virginia Beach Now Source City

Until six months ago, United States Drug Enforcement Administration resident-in-charge George Notel was the sole Federal drug enforcement agent for the entire state of Virginia.

But recently a new DEA office opened in Richmond with additional agents, freeing Notel to concentrate more on illicit drug activities around Virginia Beach.

"Virginia Beach is not a source city for heroin and cocaine traffic," Notel told the Sun, "but it may now be a source city for marijuana. At least there's an escalation of the drug traffic in Virginia Beach. That's evident by the Virginia Beach people recently involved in Beach drug busts."

As a DEA agent, Notel's responsibility is to identify major drug traffickers, and monitor their movements. He said, while it's true a tighter drug enforcement squeeze has been placed on tropic ports, that has not caused a greater influx to illicit drugs in the local area.

"Recently, the DEA and the Coast Guard got wind of an operation in Florida, and agents took boats to mother ships and made arrests," Notel said, "and activities such as those should cause the squeeze effect. But I have seen no significant change in the Tidewater area drug traffic because of it."

Notel said very few drug smugglers are anxious to cooperate with police and expose their employers, telling lies for money while they wait out their time in a jail cell.

Notel sympathizes with Virginia Beach narcotics officers, saying, "I'm frustrated like the rest of the police officers. You know who deals drugs. You make a good bust. Yet sometimes things go wrong."

Notel said much of the marijuana that enters Virginia Beach in the 1970's came from Mexico, but poisonous chemicals sprayed on Mexican marijuana fields cut down on consumer demand. Similar efforts are staged for Columbia, and may soon take place in Bolivia.

More than 200 high school members of the Thespian International Honor Society will meet on the campus of Virginia Wesleyan College this weekend, Oct. 9 through 11, for its annual Virginia State Conference.

The weekend will include performances by several schools, as well as competitions in solo/duet acting and in set and costume design.

Students will have workshops in makeup, mime, improvisation, Shakespearean acting, auditions, commercials, dinner theater, etc.

Green Run High school is hosting the state convention this year. Among local schools participating are Kempsville High School, Princess Anne, Bayside, First Colonial, Booker T., and Churchill. Other representatives will come from Alexandria, Charlottesville, Christiansburg, Prince George, and Richmond.

The conference begins with registration at 6 p.m. in the Hofheimer Theater on Friday, Oct 9 and ends at 11 a.m. on Sunday, Oct. 11.

Smoke Detectors Required

Recently, the Virginia Beach City Council approved an ordinance requiring smoke detectors in multifamily units. The ordinance, which is in effect one year from the date of passage, states that smoke detectors must be installed in buildings containing four or more dwelling units, hotels/motels, and rooming houses, group homes, dormitories and public lodgings containing more than four sleeping rooms.

For a copy of the ordinance contact the Virginia Beach Public Information Office at 427-4111.

Justice Volunteers Meet

Virginia Beach will host a nationwide gathering on volunteer services in the criminal justice field October 11 through 14.

The National Association on Volunteerism in Criminal Justice (NAVCI) will hold its 11th annual conference, Forum 81, at the Cavalier Hotel. Participants will come from all 50 states and Canada.

Mrs. John N. Dalton, Virginia's First Lady, is honorary chairman. She will present the Volunteer of the Year Award at a breakfast meeting Oct. 14.

Gov. James B. Hunt, Jr., of North Carolina will deliver the keynote address on Oct. 12 at a breakfast in the Virginia Beach Pavilion. He currently is chairman of the National Governors Association's Human Resources Committee and is a former chairman of its Criminal Justice and Public Protection Committee.

Also speaking will be Director Norman A. Carlson of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, a former president of the American Correctional Association, and former U.S. Sen. Harold Hughes of Iowa.

A total of 40 workshops and seminars are scheduled for the three days of the conference. In addition to question-and-answer sessions during the workshops, conferees will have the opportunity to consult individually with recognized experts in a variety of subject areas.

NAVCI is a nonprofit, nationally recognized organization for the criminal justice volunteer movement. It is an association of persons who believe that participation by volunteer citizens is important in the criminal justice system.

"Virginians will have a unique opportunity to learn from representatives of some of the best programs now existing, and the national association will receive more than just a glimpse of the exciting and innovative work being done by the volunteers and professionals in our criminal justice system," Norris P. Moreland, coordinator of volunteer services for the Virginia Department of Corrections, said.

"The thrust of the forum echoes President Reagan's desire for more citizen participation in all areas of public service, as expressed in his recent speech to the International Chiefs of Police Association in New Orleans."

Council Will Discuss Matter

Administrator Evaluations Urged

An annual or bi-annual evaluation of the five administrators appointed by Virginia Beach City Council will be considered by Council next Monday afternoon.

The evaluation is one part of a two-part proposal by Councilwoman Meyers Oberndorf as an alternative to a strong-mayor form of government supported by Mayor Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr.

Oberndorf had suggested a one-year evaluation, but other members thought two years would be more appropriate.

Oberndorf also suggested five standing committees each made up of two Council members to review matters within their areas of responsibility prior to consideration by the whole Council. This part of the proposal received a less than enthusiastic reception.

The five appointees are the city manager, the city clerk, the assessor, the city attorney and the high constable.

Mrs. Oberndorf said the council's difficulties were primarily in two areas, the method used to direct the five appointees and the procedures used in the consideration and adoption of the weekly agenda. The committees would address the latter problem, she said.

Oberndorf had submitted her proposal in a letter to Council members dated Oct. 8.

She said at an informal meeting Monday afternoon sometimes Council makes a request of the staff, but there is no followup. The committees would be closer to the problems in specific areas, she said. "Everyone here has something to offer," and Council has no staff of its own," she said.

She recommended the appointees be placed on annual contracts and meet with Council at the end of the contract period when they would be retained with a merit increase or at their current salary or released with severance pay.

Mayor McCoy said that the committee system is "contrary to what I was trying to say. I was trying to eliminate the part-time council from getting so involved by trying to find one person to do a job full-time." He said both he and Oberndorf were saying there were some problems that needed to be addressed. He added that contracts should be longer than a year.

Oberndorf said Council has been charged that it has been floundering without direction. She said the public put Council in office and Council is answerable to actions taken. She said she was attempting to involve Council on a personal level.

Councilman Reid Ervin said that a lot has been said about the lack of Council leadership, but "I don't agree with that." He said as individuals, Council is really working for what's best for this city. "I didn't always believe that but I do now." Of the committee system, he said that would be taking this job from the professionals. "They'll feel they're being led around by the nose."

He said if the staff is responsible it doesn't need Council's help except to establish policy. He said Councilman John A. Baum has often observed that Council policy is nebulous. He suggested evaluation of appointees every two years.

He said he agreed with Oberndorf in principle and that she was "on the right track."

He said that the evaluations should be conducted every two years when Council reorganizes. And they should take place in executive session.

As for establishing leadership, he said any simple majority is enough for him.

Oberndorf said the standing committee idea is not new.

Ervin persisted that the indictment that Council lacked leadership was unfair. "What decision would we have made differently with a strong mayor? I don't think they'd be different. This Council has been criticized too much."

He said the members of Council were unselfish and did not serve for personal economic reasons.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan said that every organization on which she served worked more efficiently with committees. She said Chesapeake Mayor Sidney M. Osman said the most effective thing he did was organize a committee system. She said the committee idea has possibilities and the evaluation proposal is "okay." "We shouldn't put them down lightly."

Councilman W. H. Kitchin III said he didn't see how committees can make the government more functional.

Oberndorf said that McCoy's proposal to change the form of government precipitated the letter. She had stated in her letter that changes could be made within the present structure without requesting changes of the General Assembly which would be the case if more power were to be given to the mayor. McCoy had suggested a strong full-time, elected mayor with a professional assistant. Other Council members have favored a directly-elected mayor without changing the city manager-Council form of government.

McCoy said if this was a reaction to what I said, we're ut on a limb." He said he supported a full-time mayor who was not gainfully employed. "The point is being missed."

"You say we're not accountable, but that's wrong," Ervin said.

"Perhaps we can consider involving Council in the process in a businesslike manner," Oberndorf said.

"We're looking for ways to address a problem when we haven't said what the problem would be," Baum said.

Ervin said the Council's only defect is that it's "sometimes not very clear on the policy we establish for the city manager."

Councilman Patrick L. Standing pointed out that "once you appoint standing committees you remove the expertise of people on other matters." He said the mayor now has authority to appoint people with the most expertise. "I don't think we should set in concrete who will serve on what," he said.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said that under the present system some things tend to be overlooked.

Vice Mayor Harold Henschel said he disagreed with the strong mayor plan but had a problem with the committee plan. He said that if things run normally, the staff will take care of the five areas and if the city has unusual problems you have the authority to appoint people to committees. "We do not need standing committees. That's what they get paid for. We can handle the other on an ad hoc basis."

He pointed out that Hanbury had asked to be evaluated. He agreed with evaluations but said the one-year contract troubled him. "I don't think you treat people that way."

McClanahan asked to have the evaluation matter put on the agenda on Monday.

Henley Opts For Elected School Board

Virginia Beach City Councilwoman Barbara Henley has endorsed elected school boards, saying that those who spend tax money should be accountable for it.

She said the General Assembly should allow each locality to decide through a referendum how its school board should be elected.

Monday afternoon, Henley asked that the item be included among the city's legislative proposals to the 1982 General Assembly. She said she had formerly held the opposing viewpoint but that now she is for an elected school board.

She said later that she had argued on the opposing side of the question in a debate during her first year on Council. She started her term in July 1979.

The side was actually assigned to her, but, she said, she was never sold on elected school boards until the 1981-82 budget was being put together. That's when the school board bombarded Council to restore to the school budget money which had been cut by City Manager George L. Hanbury.

Henley pointed out that Council "has no control over how the money is spent but we have to raise the taxes."

Under Virginia law, school boards are appointed by city councils or county boards or supervisors or a school trustees board elected by the board of supervisors.

She said that she did not know all the possibilities concerning how taxes should be raised but said that the people should know which percentage of the taxes or which taxes are for schools and which for general city administration.

By law, the city sets taxes, and appropriates a lump sum for the School Board but had no control over how the money will be spent.

Henley said the question comes up at every election and that elected School Boards are an objective of the Virginia Education Association.

She said the awkward situation in which Council was placed this year points to the inadequacies of the system.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan, who also thinks localities should be given the option to decide how school boards should be selected, pointed out that Virginia is the only state that does not allow elected boards in some form.

McClanahan who did a term paper in graduate school on the subject three years ago, said that every other state has elected school boards in some form.

She said that actually the subject is part of a larger question, Virginia, she said, "Doesn't elect a lot of officials period."

She said that in Kentucky where she comes from they go too far in one direction, electing everyone from the state superintendent of schools to the dog catcher, but "we go too far the other way. She said only constitutional officers and councils and boards of supervisors are elected. The judges have tremendous power through appointments."

She said that she is bothered by a prevalent idea that "if you elect your school boards you make it political. I don't see how you can make it more political. It will be political regardless."

She said there were advantages both ways, but that with elected boards, people will feel they have a say.

She said that almost every year a bill comes up in the General Assembly to have elected boards, but that there has been more support in recent years.

McClanahan said she is for local option so that localities won't be forced to change.

Council Considers Various Matters

Other Council members also have ideas about what the General Assembly should be doing next year.

John A. Baum hasn't given up on changing the Freedom of Information Act. He wants the State Legislature to include itself within the restrictions of the act and to redefine the meaning of a "meeting" to eliminate the need to notify anybody (the public and the press) of informal gatherings of elected officials. Baum has consistently complained about restraints of the act and of the General Assembly's willingness to exempt itself from its provisions.

Baum also thinks the General Assembly should impose a "statute of limitation on defunct corporations, Virginia Beach has had a problem with successors to defunct corporations with old titles to city streets.

Mayor Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr. thinks the General Assembly should restore the travel allowance for council members.

Bringing the suggestions to 20, including 15 forwarded by the city staff, is legislation allowing for a service fee for garbage collection.

Other proposals suggested for discussion later are:

- To expand the Appomattox River Water Authority to include Virginia Beach; provide legal basis for interbasin transfer of water.

- Increased State highway construction funds; to convert State gas tax to a percentage of wholesale price and change the construction funding formula to allocate funds to localities based on need.

- Increased per pupil allocation for education to cover actual costs of meeting standards of quality mandated by State.

- Expanded sources of local revenue; additional one percent on local sales tax or local option income tax.

- Heart and lung disabilities for police and fire should not be presumed to be job related, but rather refutable by the locality.

- To credit all Virginia Supplemental Retirement

System (VSRS) contributors to employees' accounts for all employees.

- Proration of a personal property tax.
- To exempt firefighters from jury duty.

- City Council reimbursement for personal expenses while on official business.

- Funding for Pendleton Child Service Center.

- Funding for Virginia

Beach Museum of Marine Sciences.

- Funding for expansion of Virginia Beach Fire Training Center.

- Funding for expansion of parking lot at Camp Pendleton.

- Allow State income tax deductions for local utility consumer taxes.

- Modify new senate district line to follow new voting precinct lines.

The Water Story Continues

When it comes to acquiring a long-range water source for Virginia Beach, City Councilman Reid Ervin would rather not go it alone.

Although Virginia Beach officials feel that the Beach has come out on the short end in its dealings with Norfolk over water, Ervin thinks there still may be room for cooperation between the two cities in the future.

Council already has expressed intentions to establish its own water source in conjunction with the Appomattox River system, but the cost will be astronomical.

Ervin said that Norfolk's Moore's Bridges treatment plant, for instance, is large enough for both cities so that it would be more economic for the facility to be used jointly.

Ervin said he still supported a regional system, but that it will take the State and Federal governments both to make a regional system viable.

In addition to signing the new contracts with Norfolk to guarantee Virginia Beach a water supply for the next ten years, Ervin said there are things we can propose to Norfolk to encourage cooperation. Norfolk has some facilities we can jointly use, but the city will have to become involved in other Norfolk projects such as the Airport Authority and the Chrysler Museum.

He said that Virginia Beach never has made specific proposals in this area. "Reba's right, we're talking about a terrific amount of money."

Myers, Owens Take Vows

Charlotte Ann Myers and Robert Clayton Owens were recently united in marriage at Thalia Lynn Baptist Church.

The Reverend Julius E. Foster, Jr. performed the double ring ceremony. The bride is the daughter of the Doctor Karl and Mary Elizabeth Myers Jr. of Phillips, West Virginia.

The groom is the son of Mrs. Matthew James Owens and the Late Mr. Owens.

The prelude was played by Mr. Roger Myers, brother of the bride, Mr. William Thomas Peedergram, dean of students, Virginia Wesleyan College, and "The Wedding Song," and "The Lord's Prayer" accompanied by organist, Mrs. Beverly Shethen.

The church was beautifully decorated with an arrangement of white gladioli, pink carnations and Fuji mums. There were also arching candelabras with tall white candles.

The guest book was attended by David Myers, brother of the bride, and pictures were taken by Mr. Peter Headley, friend of the groom.

Bride's gown

Escorted (and given in marriage) by her father, the bride wore a gown of heavy ivory satin fashioned with a high net lace yoke bordered with a ruffle of lace coming to a point in the front, a fitted bodice, long sleeves buttoning from the elbow and edged with lace ruffles at the hands, and a cathedral veil of sheer illusion outlined with lace flowers and held in place by a Juliet cap of matching lace. She carried an ivory lace fan decorated with pink sweetheart roses, pink tatted daisies, made by her maternal grandmother.

Honor attendants

Miss Karen Myers, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a floor length pink chiffon sleeveless gown, with a flowing skirt and a sheer chiffon cape in a soft pink floral design edged with lace and pearl neck. She carried a white lace fan with pink mini carnations, pink tatted daisies, and baby's breath. She also wore a matching tatted daisy in her hair.

The bride's attendants were: Mrs. Cecile Owens, of Virginia Beach, sister-in-law of the bride; Ms. Catherine Groves, of Morgantown, W. Va., sister-in-law of the bride; and Miss Maureen Roberts, of Virginia Beach. The bridesmaids wore gowns identical to that of the maid of honor but in light blue. They carried white lace fans identical to the maid of honor's—only smaller with white mini carnations, blue tatted daisies, and baby's breath. They wore blue tatted daisies in their hair.

The flower girl was Miss Kelly Sandeigh. She wore a floor length dress of sheer chiffon, matching the maid of honor's cape, featuring a gathered neck, puffed sleeves and a ruffle on the bottom of the skirt, which was edged with a bright pink ribbon. She carried a small basket of mini pink carnations, pink tatted daisies and baby's breath. She also wore a tatted daisy in her hair.

The mother of the bride wore a floor length gown of peach chiffon featuring a crystal pleated skirt and attached cape, with a draped neck accented by a coral necklace. She wore a corsage of mini coral carnations.

The mother of the groom wore a sleeveless floor length gown of pale pink chiffon with a sheer chiffon cape softly pleated accented with an iridescent necklace. She wore a corsage of pink mini carnations.

The mistresses of ceremonies were Mrs. Bernard Shields and Mrs. William Parks II, both of Virginia Beach.

The groom wore an all silver-blue tuxedo, a white ruffled shirt, and a silver-blue bow tie. His boutonniere was made up of two pink sweetheart roses and a sprig of baby's breath.

Mr. Matthew James Owens, Jr., of Virginia Beach, brother of the groom, was best man. His tuxedo consisted of a silver-blue jacket, black pants, black vest, and black bow tie and a white ruffled shirt. He wore a pink carnation boutonniere.

Ushers were: Mr. Richard Anello, of Virginia Beach; Mr. Trey Hodges, of Virginia Beach; Mr. David Sanford, of Virginia Beach; and Mr. David Miller, of Virginia Beach. They and the bride's father wore matching tuxedos and boutonniere's matching that of the best man.

The ring bearers were Master Shannon Owens, nephew of the groom, and Master Karl Myers, nephew of the bride. They wore light blue suits trimmed in satin and white ruffled shirts. Their boutonniere's were pink mini carnations, and they carried pink sweetheart roses which the bride and groom presented to their mothers after the ceremony.

Reception

Immediately following the ceremony the guests were invited to a formal reception in the Church Social Hall. The bride and groom began the reception by cutting a four-tier wedding cake decorated with pink roses and topped with a miniature bride and groom. Punch was served by Mrs. Lois Lawton, aunt of the bride, and Mrs. Hazel Palms, great aunt of the groom. The cake was served by Miss Carol Myers, sister of the bride, and Mrs. Deanna Myers, sister-in-law of the bride.

Reader Sympathizes With Detectives; Urges Community Support

Editor:

Your article, "Chasing the Dragon/Columbian Connection" certainly should convince the people that our drug problem is a very serious one.

An outdated act that protects these drug smugglers should be amended. Any person convicted of drug possession should not be handed a suspended sentence by our judges. These people need to be in jail, not back on the streets to do the same thing again. That's one of the reasons the drug problem is so big.

Your series on drugs should encourage more people of our city to speak up. We have let apathy hold us back too long and we can't afford to wait much longer. The problem has become so big that it should scare the people into action.

Those with children should be very alarmed since these drugs can get to your child. It is a pitiful sight to see a child or grown up strung out on drugs.

I sympathize with Detectives Benson and Boswell. They seem frustrated that they can't do more to clean up the drugs on our streets but sympathy isn't what they need, they need the people to demand that they have more manpower and the necessary resources to deal with the drug problem.

They would have done the public a favor if they had named a few of these doctors and lawyers that are, strung out on drugs! I for one wouldn't want to hire a lawyer that is on drugs; and I certainly wouldn't want a doctor that is strung out on drugs, to treat a member of my family!

Unless the people speak out against this crippling crime the next victim may be a member of your family!

I hope the people of Virginia Beach will support the Virginia Beach Sun. We have a paper here that will speak up for us, but it needs our support.

No Referendum On Reagan

Editor:

Our Governor's race is too important to be reduced to a referendum on Mr. Reagan's Presidency which is what your recent editorial basically suggested. Mr. Reagan is very popular in Virginia because he's doing a good job.

I am going to vote for Chuck Robb because he is unafraid to give his views when they don't agree with the thoughts of many in his own party. I've heard him say he agrees with what Mr. Reagan is doing in Washington. I've heard him tell labor unions when he disagreed with their stands on certain issues. Because of his forthrightness, I believe he has gained the respect of even those who disagree with him.

I urge you to look closer at the candidates. Examine Chuck Robb's comprehensive plans on economic development, education and law enforcement. These are the issues that should determine our Virginia elections. Because of Chuck Robb's serious approach to the issues, he has my support.

Remote Beach Lures Smugglers

The following is the second installment of the Sun three-part investigative series entitled Chasing The Dragon/The Columbian Connection. Last week's installment explained how illicit drugs find port into Virginia Beach, and how the Posse Comitatus Act is aiding international drug smugglers. Virginia Beach police officials also acknowledged the growing drug problem in Virginia Beach. This week's articles will feature reactions to Virginia Beach's drug problem from a Coast Guard commander and federal drug enforcement officials; plus the current legal status of the posse Comitatus Act; and the role informants play in narcotic detection. Next week's installment will feature an interview with a Virginia Beach mother and her 17 year old son who has smoked marijuana since the age of six; a guest editorial from Dolores Delaney, president of the Virginia Beach Council of P.T.A.'s; and a probe of the question of lenient sentencing in drug cases by Virginia Beach judges.

By Greg Goldfarb,
Sun Editor

The United States Coast Guard concedes, Virginia Beach has some remote spots very attractive to drug smugglers. However, Virginia Beach is not as appealing to drug smugglers as the Eastern Shore.

"Of course, Virginia Beach is close to the ocean, and remote enough in some areas to attract drug smugglers," said U.S. Coast Guard Commander Robert A. Bastek, Chief of intelligence and law enforcement, fifth Coast Guard district, Portsmouth. "But many of Virginia Beach's easily accessible areas are not that remote; especially compared to the Outer Banks of the Eastern Shore."

Virginia Beach yacht owners are tempted by big money to pick-up drugs off Virginia's coast, Bastek, a Virginia Beach resident said, and the money earned is invested back into legitimate Virginia businesses. The Coast Guard guards the coast from any attack, and also conducts surveillance and searches when necessary.

"We feel that we get about 20% of the drug traffic out there," he said, "and to stop 50% of the drug traffic we would need more men than we could get. But we won't get the needed money under the current political climate." Although drug traffic has been squeezed into Virginia Beach by tighter security crackdowns in other ports, Basten notes no noted increase in Virginia Beach.

"We see the squeeze effect every day," he said, "but it hasn't progressed to the point yet that Virginia Beach has become a mecca for drugs. The drug smugglers just sail their ships anywhere to avoid intervention."

Bastek said when the recent "Cuban Invasion" began, the Coast Guard intercepted many marijuana laden ships in routine trips to the east coast. The illicit drug action has become particularly keen in Louisiana and Texas. But as the Coast Guard becomes increasingly aware of the tropical choke off points located in tropical islands, the drug traffic has decreased, or at least until an alternate smuggling route is discovered.

"We look for ships that match our smuggling profile," he said. "We have a pretty good idea of what boats go where and why."

The drug business has involved into an industry, Bastek says, and Virginia Beach has become a recognized drop off point for drug smugglers.

Marijuana is imported into Virginia Beach more than other drugs such as heroin and cocaine, yet the profit margin of all the illicit drugs holds between 50% and 100%.

Bastek said he is encouraged that local and Federal drug enforcement agents work together as they recently did in a Pungo Hashish bust. Cooperation between the different agencies is what he said will be key to preventing illegal drug smuggling.

Informants Are Special Breed

Informants are used by law enforcement officials to learn of criminal activities before they occur, or as soon afterwards as possible.

The informants are usually criminals themselves, thus hoping for special treatment from law officers in return for special information. The personal relation between police and narcotics officers and their informants has grown over the years, and become more polished.

"Our informants pick-up information from people on the streets and let us know about it," said Virginia Beach Narcotics Detective Bruce Benson. "We rely on informant's tips before we start investigations."

Rookie narcotics agents in Virginia Beach are guided by veterans like Benson, and instructed in how to develop contacts.

"New narcotics agents don't just go right in the street the first day and start looking for informants," Benson said.

"Sure, they'll have some of their own, and will cultivate more and more as time goes on. But generally, new agents are put with more experienced agents to meet sources, and learn the techniques and procedures of undercover narcotics work."

Benson said informants must prove to be reliable, or they are no use. Informants must be actively involved with the local drug community, consequently engaging in unlawful activities to be of service to narcotics officers.

"People come to us and want to volunteer their services, but many times they are very distinguished people who can not be used because they don't fit in the drug culture," Benson said. "One good informant can do more good than 20 other wishful ones."

Most informants tip police officers to gain revenge on someone for previous drug encounters, or over a grudge.

"People inform to get back at someone for ripping them off earlier," Benson said, "or just because they have a vendetta against someone."

Benson said narcotics officers must be careful not to "burn out" an informant by using him so much it becomes apparent he is helping the police. On that same note, Virginia Beach attorney, and member of President Reagan's advisory task force on victims of crime, Frank Carrington, said there is a lack of protection for informants, and it is causing friction between local and federal drug enforcement officials.

"You take an inexperienced federal drug agent who writes up a report from the information given him by local narcotics agent," Carrington explained "and in the report the agent writes the name of the informant who made the pinch. The accused has complete access to the informant's name through the Freedom Of Information Act. That's why more experienced agents don't put the names in the report, but only gender and date."

Carrington said, sometime federal drug enforcement officials and local officers are unwilling to talk to each other. He said Congress may be asked to amend the FOI Act to allow for better protection of local and state informants.

Act Now In Closed Debates

The wheels of Government are now rolling to amend the outdated, and restrictive Posse Comitatus Act, written and passed during the Civil War.

Under the Act, military equipment and personnel are not to be used to assist local and state law enforcement officials in the enforcement of criminal law. The act specifically addressed the Army and Air Force, and reached the Navy and Marines.

Currently, the act is being debated privately in Senate and House, Armed Forces Committee meetings. The amended Act is being fostered as a rider to a 1982 United States Department of Defense appropriation bill, according to Eileen Lee, case worker, Congressman G. William Whitehurst.

"It seems that two versions of the amended act went before Congress," Lee said. "The Senate received a version calling for the use of military information and equipment in supplying information to local law enforcement agencies. The House version took it one step further, and called for the use of military personnel in working with the local agencies, and the Senate didn't agree with that idea."

Lee said it is uncertain how long the two bills will be held up in committee work, but estimates at least another several weeks.

According to Coast Guard Commander Robert A. Bastek, chief of intelligence and law enforcement branch, fifth Coast Guard fifth district, Portsmouth, the bills had not cleared either House, and that they were met with a "flurry of activity this Summer," during high level hearings of which the Coast Guard participated.

Tons of grass are lifted from ship to shore after recent drug seizure.

Editorial Comment

Robb And Coleman

There are times in this business of electing a governor when Virginians might take the whole affair for a vast practical joke. The joke, however, will be at nobody's expense but our own.

Reporters are calling the 1981 gubernatorial campaign an enigma of ill-defined issues and tenuous realignments. They say both nominees have laced their speeches and media ads with an orthodox conservatism, stressing inoffensive goals of fiscal austerity, quality education, economic development and tough law enforcement.

No significant difference has yet been uncovered in the candidates' plans to run Virginia's government. One clear difference, however, has emerged on a broader scale. Marshall Coleman, as governor of Virginia, will work with President Reagan to implement his programs. He will work hard to re-elect Reagan in 1984. Chuck Robb will work hard for the candidate who will try to defeat President Reagan. And, if elected governor, Robb will be a leading prospect to run for vice president on Walter Mondale's 1984 presidential ticket.

The Virginia voter, if more concerned with Old Dominion politics than with national implications, will have to look to each candidate's accomplishments, background and personality.

John Marshall Coleman, 39, was elected attorney general of Virginia in 1977. A native of Staunton, he served in the House of Delegates from 1972 to 1975 and the Senate from 1975 to 1977. He is a graduate of the University of Virginia and its law school. Between graduation and elected political office, Coleman joined a Staunton law firm and established himself as a skillful criminal lawyer.

Charles Spittal Robb, 42, a relative newcomer to Virginia politics, a glamour candidate with national attention, deserves detailed examination. Born in Arizona, son-in-law of Lady Bird Johnson, Robb now lives in Alexandria in a $865,288 Texas-sized mansion. He attended Cornell in New York and received a bachelor's degree from the University of Wisconsin. He served with distinction as a Marine and graduated from the University of Virginia law school in 1973. Robb joined the Washington law firm of Edward Bennett Williams. He left there in 1977 and was elected Virginia's lieutenant governor.

Robb's military record makes a great tv commercial, but there has been very little revealed about his career as a lawyer. His critics with Edward Bennett Williams say Robb was "something less than mediocre" as an attorney. An associate said he produced nothing that can be recalled and he was encouraged to enter politics because too much legal work gave him a mental overload. His chief accomplishments in Washington included dancing, blowing kisses at his wife across the bridge table, and cracking a tooth on pistachio nuts at the Kuwaiti Embassy.

If his career as a Washington lawyer might be considered a matter of opinion, his performance as a lieutenant governor is a matter of record. Senior Virginia Legislators have frequently criticized Robb's reluctance to take stands and his inability to express the stands he does take. Senate majority leader Hunter D. Andrews has openly ridiculed Robb, referring to him as "Chuckie Bird."

One of the themes of Robb's gubernatorial campaign is that he insists he can work more effectively with the Virginia legislature than Coleman. Yet each of the major pieces of legislation that he has endorsed - ERA, removal of sales tax on food, initiative referendum, Medicaid abortions - has not been approved.

His critics see Robb as an overly cautious waffler whose only claim to fame in his marriage to Lyndon Johnson's daughter. Yet Robb is a good campaigner who courts both liberals and conservatives. He knows the middle of the road may not be the most exciting place to be, but at least he is further from the ditch on either side. Since he has a record of indecisiveness, mediocrity and political opportunism, there is every reason to believe it will continue if he becomes governor. The joke will then be on Virginia. - H.B.

Two or three minutes—two or three hours,
What do they mean in this life of ours?

But minutes of gold and hours sublime,
If only we'll use them once in a while

To make someone happy—make someone smile.
A minute may dry a little lad's tears,

An hour sweep aside the trouble of years.

Minutes of my time may bring to an end

Hopelessness somewhere, and bring me a friend.

Here's why we're the busiest place on the boulevard.

Quality, Fashion Furniture. Not only do we carry the latest trends but you'll also find in our showrooms furniture from old respected manufacturers like Thomasville, Bassett, Broyhill, Burlington House, Stanley and American of Martinsville, manufacturers who still hand-rub fine woods to a satiny finish and who take a personal interest in the way fine furniture is produced.

Big Selection. Nowhere else in Virginia are there so many home furnishings under one roof. Our warehouse and showrooms contain more than seven acres of furniture, carpeting, bedding, and gifts, from the Orient, Israel, the Mid-East, India, Mexico and the United States in modern, contemporary, Early American, Colonial and French Provincial.

Low Prices. Our low prices are advertised frequently. The savings that we pass on to you are made possible by our team of knowledgeable buyers through volume buying and selective purchasing. We also assemble much of our merchandise in our warehouse, adding still further to your savings.

Service. You'll sense the extent of our friendly service as soon as you enter our showrooms. Complimentary coffee is available. So is a supervised nursery where you may leave your children while shopping. And, if you have questions about arranging your new purchases, our salespeople and our professional decorating staff will help. There's no charge for any of our services.

Teenager On Pot Since Six

By Greg Goldfarb,
Sun Editor

Seventeen year old Virginia Beach resident David Williams sees nothing wrong with habitually smoking marijuana. In fact, he predicts when he marries, his wife will casually smoke it with him. Eventually, he expects to see a President of the United States turning-on in the White House.

But while Williams' pot smoking revelations may shock and anger many Virginia Beach residents and parents, to him, his perceptions are an accurate reflection of the future of drug use in this country.

"There's nothing wrong with smoking grass," David, who has been smoking marijuana since the age of six, told the Sun. "A lot of them kids don't like it have never tried it. It's just a tobacco. I like to smoke it. I like the taste and quality."

Williams said there is widespread drug use in Virginia Beach junior and high schools, but, fortunately, not at the elementary level.

"If you want to try to get the kids to stop smoking dope, you have to get the message right down to them," David said, "but that is like going around your elbow to get to your fist. I know if you had come to me years ago and tried to tell me how bad pot smoking was for you, I'd just stick up my middle finger and tell you where to go."

"If you had come to me years ago and tried to tell me how bad pot smoking was for you, I'd just stick up my middle finger and tell you where to go." - Williams

Williams blames some of the rampant use of illicit drugs on television, and the rest on society.

"The drug problem is going to get worse," David said. "Already there's a place in New York where people can smoke dope in their home. People smoke dope and snort cocaine on television all the time. It's accepted. The President one day will smoke dope."

A community threat

Clearly, the looming use of illicit drugs is a threat to the Virginia Beach community, parents, and youths. Yet, drug consumption is something which can continue for years right under parents' noses and not be detected.

David's first knowledge of grass was at the age of five, but he never actually lit-up until he was six. "I had heard of grass when I was five," he said, "but never smoked it until I was six."

David was exposed to the drug by boys twice his age who allowed him to try it.

Don't Be Intimidated

Beach Parents Must Not Be Afraid To Confront Kids Over Pot Use

By Greg Goldfarb,
Sun Editor

"Many Virginia Beach parents don't want to invade their children's privacy and search their kids' rooms for drugs," charges Virginia Beach mother and housewife Nancy A. Williams.

"But I think it's far better for them to search the rooms," she continued, "than it is to watch the children go down the drain."

Nancy Williams is a 33-year Virginia Beach resident, and married 33 years to James T. Williams, a stone mason. They have five children and live in the city's Lake Edwards section.

The Williams' children range in ages from 16 to 23, and all reside in either Virginia Beach or Norfolk. They all have jobs, or are students. That is, all but one. And that one has been smoking marijuana since the age of six.

"David," a pseudonym to protect his identity, is 17 now and has been recently discharged from a Chesapeake alternative school for boys. Although David had been smoking marijuana since the first grade, six years elapsed before his parents realized it.

David has been thrown out of schools, and into jail by breaking in and entering houses, stealing enough to support his early teenage drug habit. Over the ensuing years of his turmoil and psychiatric testing, never was a correlation between excessive marijuana and irrational behavior evinced by clinicians; although the damaging relation, Mrs. Williams feels, is obvious.

Started out well

David was a well-mannered child during his adolescent years, but changed later on.

"Up until David was 12 or 13 years old, he was happy; had a good self-image; was well behaved; loved his family; and was never a discipline problem," Mrs. Williams said.

"But during the summer of 1976, he was 13, he began disobeying his father and me," she continued. "He started leaving the yard after he had been told not to. David also broke into neighbor's houses and stole cigarettes along with two other boys."

The burglarized homeowners did not prosecute David, and things returned to normal until that Fall when school began again.

"David was still well behaved at home," Mrs. Williams said, "but when school started that year, he and three other boys skipped classes and stole a boat. They returned it, of course, but again nothing happened for the boys for their actions."

In May of 1977, David's parents were suddenly informed by Virginia Beach public school officials that he was out of their control. His grades dropped. His school record was clean.

"I checked his records," Mrs. Williams said. "In the sixth grade, his teacher wrote that he was 'Precious'. In the seventh grade she said he was 'All boy'. And in May of that year everything just blew up."

That Summer David was placed in the Pendleton Project for children with behavioral problems. Nancy and James were told that David needed discipline and a more structured lifestyle. They attended counseling sessions with David over most of that Summer. But never was it suggested that David's deviant behavior might be attributed to his marijuana use.

David entered junior high school in the Fall of 1978, only to be thrown out within a few weeks for possession of a dope smoking instrument. It was then that Mrs. Williams began to understand the problem confronting her and James.

"The vice principal found a bong on him," Mrs.

Williams said. "They didn't expell David; instead they let me withdraw him. And that was the first time I realized that David was involved with drugs."

David was taken for psychiatric evaluations at a Virginia Beach mental health facility. It was determined that David possessed a sociopathic personality, along with an inability to interact with society. It was recommended that David be institutionalized at the age of 12. Again, his anomalous behavior was never blamed on his illicit drug use.

Following the evaluations, David was placed in another Virginia Beach junior high school in a class for emotionally disturbed children. He didn't spend a week there before being expelled for uncontrollable conduct.

"He just broke all the rules," Mrs. Williams recalls. "He was aggressive, abusive, and had a bad temper."

Mrs. Williams

Ran away eight times

Beach public school administrators recommended David be sent to Timber Ridge, a school for juveniles with behavioral problems near Winchester, VA. David was small for his age, 5' 3", 110 pounds, but he got in regular fistfights at the school. He ran away from it eight times in six weeks.

"Each time his father took him back," Mrs. Williams said.

"I told the school board that they were responsible for educating David until he was 16 years old. We wanted him to get an education."

After deciding David should attend a school called Edgemead, Upper Marlboro, the school refused to admit him.

"They said David was too happy with his lifestyle to change, and that his drug use made him not a very good candidate for admittance," Mrs. Williams said. "They also said he had antisocial friends, and was a very depressed boy. It was suggested that we try to keep him at home, in a foster home, or in an institution."

David spent three weeks at Duke University,

Durham, N.C., where psychologists concluded David was on drugs, and that his conscience was underdeveloped.

"Even Duke never suggested that the drug use was causing his problems," Mrs. Williams said.

Another psychological examination followed, and it was announced David was not psychotic, nor sociopathic, and it was suggested David enroll in a Virginia Beach vocational school.

"He did beautifully there," Mrs. Williams remembers, "until he hurt his back working and had to withdraw."

Charged with larceny

David lived at home during this period, before recently enrolling in the Chesapeake alternative school. While at the school David managed to get into even more trouble.

"He was charged with burglary and larceny," his mother said, "and given suspended sentences. Because he was only 16 years old he was put on probation. David became very abusive around the house, threatening to beat his sister, father and me up. He threatened to stab his brother and future brother-in-law, and beat them all up also."

"The overriding thing, however," Mrs. Williams continued, "was David's temper. When he lost it, it was a horrible thing to behold. He'd hit his sister. He'd threaten to burn the house down. One morning I couldn't find his coat and he kicked a hole in the door. Finally we called David's probation officer and told him we couldn't take it any more. That's when he was put in the Chesapeake alternative school."

Nancy said David has now learned to better control his temper, and has again become closer with his family. She thinks that when David was in jail, his attitude turned around.

"He hated it. David thought he was alright and the rest of the world was out of step," Mrs. Williams said. "He said he felt like a rat in a maze during the psychiatric examinations, being constantly observed."

Warning signs

Mrs. Williams said she believes David's excessive marijuana smoking has affected his manner of walking; his height and lack of height; his garb; sparse eating habits; and absent mindedness.

"He has a habit of leaving his possessions over at his friend's houses," Mrs. Williams said. "It became typical for him to leave a jacket or a ski suit somewhere, and never retrieve it."

Mrs. Williams said David was very mobile, and his friends were not always known. Mrs. Williams said parents should "listen for the silence" from their children, and try to notice if their children have deviated from their normal character.

Mrs. Williams also said parents need to come out of the closet, and face their personal family problems.

"I hope parents will read this," she said, "and if we can save other parents from going through the same hell we have, I will be satisfied. Parents are complacent, and tend not to think that a situation such as this can evolve in their family. But drug problems affect families rich and poor alike. We finally faced up to it, and made up our minds that David was not going to intimidate us any more."

Mrs. Williams said parents need to realize that the chemicals inhaled while their children smoke dope, do not dissolve in water.

"There's 400 chemicals in a marijuana cigarette," she said, "and they are not water soluble. They have to go somewhere. Usually to your child's head where the chemicals just sit and deteriorate the brain cells!"

If Parents Don't Care Who Will?

By Dolores Delaney,
President, V.B. Council of P.T.A.'s

To many Virginia Beach parents the recent seizures of large quantities of marijuana and hashish come as a welcome relief. The seizures represent the tip of the iceberg perhaps, but it is that much less to pollute our community.

For nearly two years the Virginia Beach Council of P.T.A.'s has worked steadily to alert parents to the gravity of the drug problem in our city. It has not been easy. The public posture has been to discount the whole issue as being blown out of proportion by emotion. It is understandable, following the reasoning that we choose to ignore what is unpleasant in most cases.

Delaney

That kids taking drugs is an emotional issue is certain. That hundreds of our youngsters are "turning on" just as certain. No single thing strikes so close to the core of a parent as a threat to their child. In the case of drug abuse however, another phenomenon occurs. It is a triad of denial, guilt and fear: "It could never be my child." "What have I done wrong to make them do this?" "What if I can't get him to stop?"

For those of us working with parents in Virginia Beach, the interviews in this issue are not new. They are no longer terrifying. At this point, the shock is gone and is replaced by lingering pain and concern...and a question...how long will we sit complacently and let this continue to happen?

When the Council of P.T.A.'s started researching ways to address this problem, we came up with an interesting idea. Throwing millions of dollars into studies had not solved it. Saying it doesn't exist hadn't solved it. Wringing our hands and saying something is wrong with society hadn't solved it. The answer was simple. We have to solve it. We will solve it by using those same skills that fortified us through every crisis our families have ever faced. We will solve it through force of will, an instinct to protect what is ours and the belief that we have both the right and the responsibility to do so.

It is easy to understand how we could get to this stage without calling a halt. We have the natural desire to believe everything is alright. We don't like disruptions in the status quo. Everything is going along fine and we assume that it always will. We are further conditioned to discount early warnings by studies which tell us that the cause of drug abuse among youngsters is due to societal ills such as poverty, unemployment and racial discrimination. Well, that certainly lets us off the hook. It also explains why so many of our white, middle-class kids are doing drugs. We, their parents, are unemployed, they are poverty stricken and have gotten sick and tired of being called insulting ethnic names.

We can no longer stand idly by and watch our hopes for the future go down the drain as dealers chant their litany of "stuff," "huds," "coke," "blotter acid" "speed" and "China white." We have to use the same tactics citizens of this country have always used when their values and ideals have been threatened. We have to act together as parents, teachers, public officials, law enforcement officers and courts to see that clear messages go out. No amount of drug money in the world is equal to the life of even one Virginia Beach youngster.

We must educate ourselves. We must be alert. We must support legislation designed to stop legalization of marijuana and other substances harmful to our children and youth. We must be a constant presence in support of our police and laws. We must get involved in the every day life of our children, offering support, encouragement, and most importantly, direction. As one element in our concept of "parent power" the PTA is involved in court watching. With the assistance of the Commonwealth's Attorney, we send monitors into the courts to observe drug-related trials. We represent the absent victims and our fellow citizens. It is a quiet way of saying, we're watching and we care."

We have the best public school system, yet the best school system in the world cannot educate students with short term memory loss, anesthetized logic and imperfect decision-making skills. We need well-educated, highly motivated citizens to mold our future. We do not need "laid back", pleasure seeking non-producers. This country's existence is based on perseverance, but not perseverance in the pursuit of self-gratification.

There is no single thing we can't do if we join together in the effort, remembering that from the ship on the coast to the "pit" across from school can be measured in miles. The trip from the first "joint" or pill to the last can be measured only in terms of pain, guilt, fragmented families and loss. One is a question of economics, the other of human disintegration.

Nothing the Virginia Beach Council of P.T.A.'s could do can erase what the mother and son in these articles have been through. Nothing anyone can do can accomplish that. Nor can we ease the pain of the families attempting to cope with the damage already done to one of their loved ones. What we can do is say that we are here. We have begun. We are committed. We will reach out and join hands with those around us and announce to anyone who doubts our determination, "No longer will we sacrifice one Virginia Beach youngster - not my son, not their daughter, not one. They are ours. If we don't care enough to protect them, who will?"

Delaney Active

Delaney is a 13 year Virginia Beach resident, and has served as president of the Virginia Beach Council of P.T.A.'s since last May. She is the former juvenile protection chairman of the Council. The Council represents 57 P.T.A. groups in the city, with a membership exceeding 23,000.

Delaney is married 25 years to Bob Delaney. They have three children and live in the Windsor Woods section for the city. Delaney is also on the treatment committee, the National Federation of Parents for Drug Free Youths.

But Lam Admits Leniency

Most Judges Silent On Sentencing

Would harsher sentencing in Virginia Beach courts in drug related cases deter increasing drug traffic in Virginia Beach? When convicted felons, charged with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, are handed suspended sentences, is that a violation of the spirit of the law?

These questions have been asked recently by Virginia Beach detectives, drug enforcement experts, and concerned citizens.

Beach detective Bruce Benson charges that Virginia Beach judges hand out suspended sentences "like it's going out of style," and contends suspending sentences is circumventing the law.

Beach attorney and national drug enforcement advisor Frank Carrington said, "while judges may not be actually violating the letter of the law by suspending sentences, they are violating the spirit of the law."

Four Virginia Beach Circuit Court judges, and one General District judge were contacted by the Sun and asked the following question. Their answers follow immediately.

QUESTION: Virginia Beach detectives and other civic leaders have charged that in some Virginia Beach courts, some Virginia Beach judges are circumventing the law by handing out lenient sentences in drug cases. For example, a man charged with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute may not receive the five year sentence the felony offense calls for, but may receive a three year suspended sentence, leaving two years of which, time may be eliminated for good behavior. So in reality, a man deserving five years in jail may end up serving less than one year.

We understand there are special considerations for plea bargaining and exchanges of information. However, while suspending sentences may not be a violation of the letter of the law, some people contend it is a violation of the spirit of the law. Do you agree?

JUDGE PHILIP L. RUSSO: No comment.

JUDGE AUSTIN E. OWEN: No comment.

JUDGE BERNARD G. BARROW: I'm not in a position to comment on the sentencing policies of other judges.

JUDGE CALVIN SPAIN (General District Court): It would not be appropriate for me to comment. I'm not in criminal court.

JUDGE HENRY LAM: I don't violate the spirit of the law. Other judges may do it but I don't. It's a very complicated matter to try to delay with simply. The drug problem is the worst problem we have in Virginia Beach. These cases should be tried by jury. The city prosecutor should get behind these cases more. Sentences have been on the lenient side, but most of the time we are told to consider suspending sentences in exchange for information from the defendant. It's a broad problem, but harsher sentencing may cut down on the drug traffic in Virginia Beach.

Investigative Series Ending

These articles conclude a Sun three-part investigative series on illicit drug use in Virginia Beach. The first installment of the series entitled "Chasing the Dragon: The Columbian Connection" focused on how illicit drugs gain entry into Virginia Beach, and factors contributing to increased drug smuggling efforts into the city. The second installment centered on official reactions from Federal and military authorities on Virginia Beach's drug problem. This installment features a mother and child actively engaged in dealing with the potentially tragic effects of prolonged marijuana use; a guest editorial from a Virginia Beach parent and civic leader; and comments from Virginia Beach judges over whether or not the spirit of the law is violated by suspending sentences in some drug case convictions.

The Sun will continue to monitor local developments, and reactions from the Virginia Beach community over the city's growing drug problem.

"I Feel Sorry Now For Parents" - Williams

two or three people I did not get high," he said, "but the second time it affected me. It was very relaxing. I was never told what the effect of the grass would be; I ain't stupid. But they asked me if I wanted to try it, which I did, but they never forced me to smoke."

David said his early pot smoking days were spent on Virginia Beach street corners. As he grew older, pot became more accessible to him; consequently his use of it grew.

"I never really had to buy pot," he said, "and I don't sell it. I used to be a middleman, more or less, and if I didn't have any pot and needed it, I'd take it if people didn't give me some. I was about 12 years old when I started using my money that I got from home to get grass if I didn't have any."

David said friends of all ages experience various kinds of drugs. But he restricts his drug intake to marijuana. "A lot of my friends take speed and coke (cocaine)," he said. "I've tried speed and coke but I don't like it. I don't even like beer. I used to drink liquor, until I started drinking too much and decided it wasn't worth it. What other people do is not my business. Some of my friends are dead now from taking too much acid; or they got killed in a car crash. Another friend of mine shot himself. People know the drugs are bad, but they just like the buzz. They think more of the buzz they get from drugs than they do about their own lives. Many people disagree with people doing these things, but there's not much they can do about it."

David said primarily, he and his friends (ranging in ages from the early teens to late twenties) usually stay indoors watching television, playing records, and smoking dope. David said that after a certain point, continued smoking yields no marked increase in the effects it renders.

"We spend the whole night smoking," he said, "but after a while you quit smoking because you don't get any higher, and it's a waste of dope."

The most David has smoked over the last three or four years is an ounce of grass a day between several people. The least he smokes is a couple joints a day.

"Sometimes I go weeks without it because I can't get it," he said. But I can live without it; it's no big deal if I can't get it."

David will probably marry, and feel certain his wife will smoke with him.

"I was brought up with an older generation, many of them are married," he said. "The kids stay in the house while the parents get high. The girl I marry will probably smoke pot. We'll probably smoke it to relax."

Although David has been smoking since an early age, he would not want his children, if he had any, to begin smoking as early in life as he did.

"I don't think I should have started smoking pot at the early age I did," he said. "I should have waited until I was at least 16 or 17 years old. That's the age I think children should reach before they consider smoking pot. I've got my reasons for feeling that way; and they're in the best interest of the kids. But if they started smoking earlier than that, I couldn't stop it."

Hesitantly, David admitted that his excessive marijuana may have caused things to happen he didn't feel comfortable about.

"There was one point over the years," David said reflectively, "that I was almost pushed to the point of doing something to myself. I calmed down quite a bit after that, but I know I'm not afraid of dying."

Fight to survive

An uncontrollable temper haunted David and his family for years. Now, according to he and his mother, his temper has subsided. But David remembers he used to get actions, and to protect himself.

"When I used to get mad, I used to really blow up," David recalls. "I still have my temper, but I can control it much better now. I use it now when I need to. Like in a fight; I lose my temper to defend myself."

As David was growing up, he had regular encounters with other boys who taunted him and fought with him to make him tougher.

"I used to get my butt kicked all the time," David recalls. "My friends just wanted me to be tough. And I am tough. I don't take no crap from nobody."

But David realized he had developed two lives: a street life, and a home life. He now tries to keep the two lives better balanced.

"I see the separate lives now," David said. "I used to act at home like I used to act on the street. Now I try to act on the street like I act at home. I used to get in trouble. I used to get in fights if people said or did anything I didn't like. But now I just let things like that ride. I was getting into too much trouble on account of my temper."

David said he never acted wildly in a car because that's "stupid" and dangerous. However, he feels it is his right to celebrate at parties in people's homes.

"I don't get crazy as much as I used to," he said. "I still like to get radical at parties, and visit friends who live in Back Bay, Moyock, Hatteras, Newport News, Hampton, Norfolk and Chesapeake. I don't drive, but I always get back home. I don't get crazy in cars either. That's stupid! There's a place and a time to get crazy and in a car is not one of them. If people want to get down in their cars, they should go down to Creeds and race."

"Dead friends make you think twice about your drug habits. One day you're with your friend, and the next day he's dead." - Williams

David wishes he had stayed in school, but was expelled twice and now is uncertain when he will receive his high school diploma. It is one of the major regrets of his life.

"I would have liked to have stayed in school. I like education," he said, "but if you know a trade it doesn't matter. A trade is something that can't be taken away from me. They took school away. I liked school and wish now my parents had tied me down to a chair and made me study. But then I was too into partying to care about learning."

David said that during the last couple of years, he acted tough and got thrown out of school to keep his tough image. But now that image has changed.

"I know I can make it in society," he said. "I know I can, and should, earn a living. I'll probably still smoke pot for years to come. But I don't smoke before I work. You can mess things up."

Years and years of smoking marijuana has taken its toll on David. He smokes cigarettes, and confesses now to getting regular dizzy spells.

"Smoking grass does not hurt my eyes," he said, "but if I get up too fast now I get dizzy. I mean, for example, if I got up real fast at this moment, I would get dizzy."

David gets dizzy from pot smoking, while others have died from taking narcotics.

"Dead friends make you think twice about your drug habits," he said. "One day you're with your friend, and the next day he is dead. I feel sorry now for the parents. Like if a kid comes in drunk, that type of thing hurts parents very badly, and it is not even their fault. What I have done hurts me because I know I wasn't brought up badly. That's one of the reasons why I used to stay away from home so much. I didn't want to bother my parents."

David said, when he was breaking into homes to steal merchandise to support his drug habit, he could make $300 to $600 a week for a few hours work.

"I wish I had never done that stuff," he said, "and I will never do it again. The people we ripped off were usually people who had already ripped us, or our friends off."

Many teenagers like David

David said there are many teenagers in Virginia Beach just like him, and some much worse.

"There's a lot of people taking acid," he said. "And they're a lot worse off than I."

David remembers when his mother found two joints on him one day and took him to the police station.

"I told her not to take me there," he said, "and that she was just going to be laughed at for bringing a 12-year old kid with two joints to the police station. They did laugh."

Above all, David said he wants to return to work as an electrician and air conditioning man. He expects to live at home until he is 18, and then he plans to move to California.

"There's a lot going on there," he said. "I know a few people in California and I would like to go there. I need to get out of here. I've been here too long. But I'll come back someday to see my family and friends."

"The name 'David' is a pseudonym, to protect the real character's identity."

Letters To The Editor

The Beach War Against Drugs Is Dangerous And Real

Editor:

Your series on drugs makes it very clear that we have a war going on, a war against ill-wit drugs. This war can cripple and kill as much as any other war. In this war we seem to be losing the battle. These people connected with drugs will do anything to get them on the streets. Their greed for money makes them lose all sense of what these drugs are doing to our people and our country.

Drugs are affecting the safety of our country. We read about the effect it has had on our navy men. The navy announced recently that 48% of the navy enlisted personnel tested had "used marijuana". The Ledger Star had a story Oct. 9, 1981, about the drug bust on the Pacific based carrier USS Midway. Undercover agents seized 18 pounds of marijuana. This took place Sept. 14. On Sept. 22 a Midway sailor was found dead in a rooming house, the victim of a heroin overdose. On Sept. 24 another Midway sailor was found dead in a rooming house, he also was a victim of a heroin overdose. A few days ago the Ledger Star had another story about the Marine pilot whose plane crashed on the carrier USS Nimitz, May 26. There was an abnormally high dosage of an antihistamine found in the body of the pilot. Besides the pilot, 13 other people died in this plane crash. In addition 48 men were injured and 20 planes heavily damaged or destroyed in the resulting explosions and fire that caused at least $100 million in damages.

When I hear a plane fly over I wonder if the pilot may be on drugs. It is enough to scare the dickens out of a person. Will on of these people push a wrong button and blow up our city? Just like it happened on the USS Nimitz, it could happen here! This should encourage the people to speak up where it counts to get these drugs off our streets. This is one war we can't afford to lose!

Judge Candidates On Records

Editor:

Guilt by association is a dangerous proposition. Why can't we just judge Mr. Robb and Mr. Coleman on their own records. Mr. Coleman is the first Attorney General in many years to refuse to resign his full time job while he seeks the Governorship.

Mr. Coleman talks about uniform sentencing over and over again, but he's never been able to get it through the General Assembly. Republican Senator Herbert Bateman helped kill the bill. The reason so many people in both parties oppose the bill is that in many cases, it will decrease sentences for criminals.

Mr. Robb on the other hand has proposed comprehensive plans on economic development, education, senior citizens and energy. He has been a splendid Lieutenant Governor... the first in our history to be selected Chairman of the Lieutenant Governor's Conference. Mr. Robb will make a really outstanding Governor.

Get Off Reagan's Coattails

Editor:

It is unfortunate that Mr. Coleman cannot run on his own record but must grab for Mr. Reagan's coattails. Ronald Reagan is doing a great job in Washington but we also need a good man in Richmond.

Your endorsement of Marshall Coleman missed the point. In Virginia Beach, we don't vote for the party, we vote for the best man. This year, the best man is Chuck Robb. His solid record of achievement throughout his military career, legal career and as Lieutenant Governor makes him just the man for the job. He is the first Lieutenant Governor ever to be selected as Chairman of the National Conference of Lieutenant Governors.

Maybe if Mr. Coleman had a similar record he could run on his own.

A guide for Virginians who still may not know the candidate they're planning to vote for:

MARSHALL COLEMAN

THE RHETORIC & THE RECORD

Collective Bargaining for Public Employees

Gubernatorial candidate Marshall Coleman says he adamantly opposes collective bargaining for public employees.

In the General Assembly, Mr. Coleman voted for legislation that would have given public employees a modified form of collective bargaining: House Bill 1891 in 1973; and House Bill 591 in 1974. Bill 591, which he sponsored, contained no anti-strike provisions.

Tax Increases

In May 1981, candidate Coleman pledged to veto any tax increase if elected governor.

In February 1980, Mr. Coleman supported the proposed 4% tax on the wholesale price of gasoline, declaring that the Highway Fund would still have sufficient revenues to finance only 80% of needed projects.

In August 1981, he proposed funding new highways via revenue bonds and tolls and by diverting General Fund money to the Highway Fund. He also hinted at a tax increase for the trucking industry.

Legislative Experience

Mr. Coleman says his experience in the General Assembly is one of his major qualifications to be governor. Actually, he served one and a half terms in the House and a half term in the Senate before resigning to become Attorney General.

Quality of service counts far more than time in office. Mr. Coleman introduced 71 bills and resolutions, but only 29 were passed. Of the 137 measures he co-sponsored, only 61 passed. He offered three different versions of his 'uniform sentencing' legislation. Not one passed.

The Reagan 'Referendum'

This year, Mr. Coleman is anxiously calling Virginia's gubernatorial election a 'Referendum on President Reagan.'

In 1976, Mr. Coleman worked actively to block the Reagan nomination. In 1977, he called Mr. Reagan's visit on behalf of the Coleman opponent for attorney general an 'intrusion.' And only last year, he refused to endorse Mr. Reagan until it was obvious he would be the presidential nominee.

Conflict of Interest

In 1975, Mr. Coleman introduced House Bill 1284, requiring lobbyists to 'report all retainers, wages and salaries received in connection with lobbying.'

This year, it was discovered that Mr. Coleman's running mate, Nathan Miller, drafted and voted for legislation benefiting certain electric utilities while on retainer as general counsel for those companies. Mr. Coleman's response: 'I'm satisfied with Nathan's conduct.'

In 1980, The Roanoke Times reported that Attorney General Coleman 'supports the creation of a special ethics commission to investigate possible unethical conduct by members of the General Assembly.'

This fall, Mr. Coleman had to return a campaign contribution to a member of his finance committee. As attorney general, he had been asked to investigate the man's vote on a controversial highway as a member of the State Highway Commission.

Woodstock Quilt Wins State

Robin Davenport promised his fourth grade class last year at Woodstock Elementary that a lot of people would get to see the quilt they had made as a social studies project.

A lot of people did see the quilt: it was exhibited at the 1981 State Fair in Richmond, and it won first prize in the group project sewing category of the Youth Arts and Crafts division.

Davenport's students were studying about the Pennsylvania Dutch in the fourth grade social studies text, "Our People." One of the chapter's enrichment activities suggested a class quilt, which is one of the crafts the Pennsylvania Dutch are famous for.

Parents donated cloth material, and each of the 31 students sewed together at least one panel of nine two-inch squares in a design of their choosing. After a week of sewing in spare class time or at home, the class made 72 panels, which Davenport then had backed and edged into a quilt.

He thought at first the quilt could be displayed at the school, but he found out about the Youth Arts and Crafts division of the State Fair. He contacted fair officials and explained the project his students completed, and the officials said "send it up."

"The State Fair people were delighted to have the quilt entered, because they want to expand their youth division. They urged me to let other teachers know that individual youth or group projects can be entered," Davenport said.

The quilt was displayed in the fair's youth building from Sept. 24 through Oct. 4. Shortly after it went on display, Davenport learned that it had won first place in its category.

Davenport's students, now fifth graders, did not learn about the prize until after the fair. "Although one student who has since left Woodstock attended the fair and recognized his class project," he said.

Davenport received a blue ribbon for the quilt, and each student who contributed to the quilt received one, too. The quilt is now displayed at the entrance to Woodstock's cafeteria for all parents, students and visitors to see.

Lexington Green Wins Award

Lexington Green, in the Green Run section of Virginia Beach, recently won the merit award in the For-Sale Affordable Homes category awarded by Builder Magazine. There were almost 500 entries in six categories of competition.

Lexington Green was built by Peterson Associates, Inc. and is being marketed by Goodman Segar Hogan Residential Sales Corporation.

The 183 homes were designed for VA and FHA buyers, ranging in price from $45,950 to $53,950, similar to some townhouse prices.

The units differ from townhomes in the use of a zero lot line which allows for large, private back and side yards. A floating storage room and connecting walls satisfied city requirements that the homes be attached.

Interior design of each home allows versatility in use. This is a "cohesive plan for a small, single-family unit," said the judges, "cohesive in its interior design and its exterior, monolithic appearance."

Million Dollar Raffle

"Procced At Own Risk" - Ervin

In approving a raffle which is legal in Virginia would the Virginia Beach City Council actually be approving a lottery which is not?

Councilman John A. Baum wants to know what is the difference between a raffle and a lottery. "If you're making laws about frogs and mice and here comes a herd of elephants...don't tell me it doesn't make a difference. It make a lot of difference," he said at Council's informal session Monday afternoon.

The inference is that the General Assembly was not thinking about a $10 million raffle like the one proposed by the Poseidia Institute when it provided for raffles and bingo games.

At the formal session of Council later, Councilman Reid Ervin said he could see the chance of abusing the law. "I think the law was to allow fraternal organizations...to conduct a raffle" and bingo games were allowed because of the number of elderly people who like to play. He recalled the raid on the bingo game in Aragona Village before the law was put into effect. It was a fiasco, he said.

Mayor Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr. said that "lottery" and "raffle" need to be redefined.

Council first deferred the raffle permit item for two weeks because the application was not included in the agenda. In two weeks the matter was deferred again so that the city could get an opinion from Attorney General Marshall Coleman and the Institute could obtain an opinion from the Internal Revenue Service on the legality of the raffle.

The information was not available Monday and Council was ready to vote on a motion for denial of the permit until Poseidia officials expressed a preference for deferral. Council then voted to wait until it gets the information from the attorney general and the IRS.

City Attorney Dale Bimson requested the attorney general's opinion through Commonwealth's Attorney Andre Evans which is the procedure required. Evans is running for reelection while Coleman is running for governor. Ervin wanted to know, perhaps facetiously, whether Bimson would get the opinion before or after the election. "Is he sitting on it?" he asked. "Why don't we ask him to get the thing done?"

Baum said it does look as though Council is stalling. "When the commonwealth's attorney is running for office and the attorney general is running for office...they're not going to do anything about it. Suppose Evans loses to his opponent, Paul A.) Sciortino? It would be a long time getting an opinion."

Evans said Monday night that he did not request an opinion from the attorney general because he had not received necessary information from Bimson. He said that under the law when an opinion is requested that "you have to tell what your opinion is." He said that Bimson did write him to request an opinion, but his letter did not say what his opinion was. "He had the facts and I didn't," Evans said, and Evans needed Bimson's opinion on which to base his request.

Evans said he had talked to Bimson today and Bimson said that he had the letter with the necessary information delivered by messenger to Evans' secretary Friday. Evans said he had not received the letter Friday and his secretary was not in the office today because of the State holiday.

Evans said that the attorney general is not required to respond within any specified time and said the time it takes to receive an opinion usually has to do with how difficult the subject matter is.

Ervin said later that he knew about the statute, which also provides that a request could be made merely by citing the law and asking for an opinion with no comment. He added that Bimson had not told Council that the opinion or second letter had not been delivered. He said "Andre has done everything he was supposed to do. My comments were not to criticize."

"Whether we agree or disagree," Ervin said, Poseidia had the right to expect reasonable expedition in the handling of its application. The trial we're putting them through is unwarranted. We have done everything we could to make it difficult."

Councilman W. H. Kitchin had said earlier at the Council meeting Council would not be doing the institute any favor by approving the permit which may later be found illegal.

Ervin said the applicant could proceed at their own risk.

Ervin said that if the application is in order, "we have the obligation to act. I think legally you're on safe grounds. If we have problems with what you're doing, it's the law that permits it."

Although the law places a $1,000 ceiling on bingo games, there is no limit on raffles.

The Institute has a tax exempt status which is one requirement for conducting the raffle. However, Bimson expressed concern that the Institute's plan to build a housing development and provide low interest mortgages might change this situation.

M. Leonard Baker, Poseidia deputy director, said that he had called the IRS but that it was "impossible to get through to any live body." He was instructed by Council to write to the IRS this time.

He pointed out that permit at any time and Council could revoke the Chamber Approves Proposal For City To Join Authority

By Bill J. Center
Special to the Sun

The Executive Committee of the Virginia Beach Chamber of Commerce has voted to endorse and actively support the City's proposal to seek admission to the Appomattox River Water Authority and consequently construct a water line from the Authority's present reservoir to Virginia Beach, according to Nancy Crech, chamber president.

At its recent meeting the Board of Directors of the Chamber authorized the Executive Committee to study the Appomattox proposal and take a position.

Crech said the executive committee finished its study last week and, in view of Virginia Beach's growing water requirements, agreed the Appomattox plan is a viable solution to our city's long term water needs.

"Virginia Beach has, over the past many months, assumed a leadership role in searching for new water sources for Tidewater, but the Appomattox plan definitely indicates our willingness to step out and begin to build our own independent sources," Crech pointed out.

"There is undoubtedly more than one way to solve this water problem for the long term, but the Appomattox plan is feasible and is certainly one of our best opportunities at the present time," Mrs. Crech concluded.

Raffle Causing Concern that the Institute would consider modest fees for City Manager George any extra expense to which the city would be put because of the size of the raffle.

L. Hamby, who had recommended approval of the permit because the Institute met city requirements, had concerns about possible added work for the Police Department and the Finance departments.

Poseidia Director Jean Campbell said "We're being penalized in advance. The permit is being withheld because of possibilities."

Ervin said that if the law is improper "we should move to change the law."

In response to Mayor Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr.'s comment that the size of the raffle is "scary," Campbell said that response of the public has been overwhelmingly in favor. Opinion was sampled over two radio talk shows, she said, and on petitions.

Campbell said she "objected to the feeling she was getting." She insisted the opinion from the IRS was premature because it would be based on "if."

To insist, on the IRS statement, she said, is just a way of delaying the permit.

Baker said to guard against law violations by people tempted by the size of the raffle, the Institute would also consider bringing in a person experience in state lotteries to guard against pitfalls.

Andre Evans Stands By His Convictions.

Among those who would like to see Andre Evans replaced are people who would much rather have someone they could influence.

Someone willing to show a little favoritism. Someone willing to take orders. Someone without the tough minded integrity of Andre Evans.

But Andre is determined that the Commonwealth's Attorney must remain non-political. Incorruptible. Unafraid to tackle anyone who should be prosecuted. And lucky for Virginia Beach, that's the way it's been. For 14 years.

TEACHERS

A teacher creates something out of his mind, his heart, and his spirit that will not rest until the product attains wholeness, purpose, goal.

To teach is to respond to the responsive, to correct the careless.
It is to rejoice in truth, to warn against error.
It is to die, yet to attain new freshness.
It is to give without the assurance of being received.

To teach is to develop, to direct, to dream, to actualize.
It is to encourage, to enlist, to motivate, to stabilize.
It is to impart, thereby to retain.

To teach is to plant that others may grow.
It is to encourage, to enlist, to motivate, to stabilize.
It is to impart, thereby to retain.

To teach is to plant that others may grow.
It is to dig that others may go deeper.
It is to sow that others may envision new horizons.

To teach is to learn from others.
It is to laugh...to cry.
It is to think, to weigh, to treasure...to throw away.

To teach is to live, to be fulfilled, to do God's will.

Virginia's Next Leader

A Clear Choice

The radio commercials are harsh this October, even more slanderous than anyone can remember. The TV spots are softer and longer, but still backbiting. The newspaper ads will come in the final days with more negative broadsides.

Gubernatorial candidates Chuck Robb and Marshall Coleman are attacking each other with unusual venom. It's a fight now, and in every campaign there inevitably comes the time of dirt. No matter how high-toned in the beginning, a campaign always ends up with no holds barred.

Virginians have been aching for a good fight between Robb and Coleman, even though they now sit around talking about how awful it is that they're fighting so dirty. The smut will increase, so no need to grope, just get ready for a brawling finale.

Robb says Coleman has made it an "art form" to engage in negative campaigning, and has suggested the Coleman nose has grown with each attack. Chuck laments, "I just can't believe it. The real issue of this campaign—far and away the most important issue—is leadership."

Coleman has pinned a Great Society label on Robb and says he (Coleman) can do more for Virginia working with the Reagan administration. Robb says that to tie him to the Great Society is an attempt to smear him. Events suggest that if there is smearing going on in this campaign, it has been done by Chuck's record. Robb made it, Coleman did not. To put it bluntly, Robb has smeared himself.

The TV debate last Thursday in Richmond focused on leadership qualities and Robb's Great Society background. Coleman recalled Robb's keynote address at the 1978 Virginia Democratic Party convention. Robb told his audience: "There was once a man who personified the spirit of the Democratic Party. His name was Hubert Humphrey. Well, Hubert is gone now. But that valiant, fighting spirit lives on. Humphrey probably knew more about the Democratic spirit than any man who ever carried the banner of our party. Our challenge is to continue his work, to complete the unfinished business of America."

Coleman says that to complete what Robb calls the unfinished business of America, is to continue the programs that have increased inflation, taxes and government interference to intolerable levels. Hubert Humphrey advocated everything the 20th century can imagine and the 21st century can pay for. If Robb wants you to believe that to continue Hubert Humphrey's work is not a continuation of the Great Society, then hypocrisy has made the most brilliant advance.

During the TV debate Robb downplayed the candidates' differences in issues and said the campaign is really about the difference in character and personal leadership ability. "A leader," Coleman has said, "is someone who is not fuzzy on the issues. A leader is someone who can be understood when he speaks. A leader isn't afraid to take a stand. A leader speaks for himself. He has ideas. He has actually done something. A leader is someone who leads. And he's someone who has gotten there on his own."

To illustrate the difference in leadership and legislative experience, Coleman said, "I cast more than 3,000 legislative votes. My opponent during his entire political career cast only four." And if he does get into a position of legislative leadership, Robb watchers say he will continue to rely on others. They see him as the totally manipulated politician, dominated by his managers and his seconds. Can this be leadership?

At critical times in the TV debate Robb appeared puzzled, even hurt, and was stung into a sort of stammering. Standing alone, without his helpers, his indecisiveness and lack of ideas were obvious. Listening to Robb debate the issues is about as scintillating as reading copy on the back of a breakfast cereal box. If this is leadership, followers will be hard to find.

Leadership is an issue upon which the 1981 gubernatorial election should properly focus. Of the two candidates, who is the more experienced leader? Who is more likely to effectively support President Reagan's economic recovery program? Who is more likely to be a fulltime governor, working in the best interest of Virginia?

It is Marshall Coleman who encourages hope of genuine accomplishment in these important directions. Virginia demands leadership equal to the state's problems and opportunities. —H.B.

Fishing Pier Haunting Council Again

The old Virginia Beach Steel Fishing pier at 2nd Street comes back to haunt the city—this time to the tune of $31,232.

City Council on Jan. 12 appropriated $148,812 for the removal of the submerged pieces of the pier, but there proved to be more there than the contract called for. The contract estimated 30 pieces, but the contractor already has removed about one-half of the length of the original pier, 294 pieces of miscellaneous steel and 13 pieces of dredge pipe. Since the debris exceeds the estimate, the contractor wanted to renegotiate the terms of the contract.

Although the job has been terminated prior to its completion, City Manager George L. Hanbury said, the cost of the work completed exceeds the contract amount by $31,232.

Council by a vote of 9-1 with Reba McClannan dissenting Monday approved the additional appropriation.

The city inherited the problem from the owner of the pier who had been required to remove it. After the city accepted the job as completed the debris surfaced on the changing ocean floor creating hazardous conditions for the beach-going public.

Windsor Raises $11,600

By Joe Lowenthal,
Special to the Sun

The American Heart Association recently reported that the students and faculty of Windsor Oaks Elementary raised more than $11,600 last April, tops among all colleges and schools in Virginia participating in the association's 1981 Jump-A-Thon.

The Jump-A-Thon was a national event which promoted physical education and cardio-vascular health while raising funds to help local heart associations fight against heart disease and stroke.

To show its appreciation, the Heart Association invited Rick DeLugo, the physical education teacher who organized the Windsor Oaks Jump-A-Thon, and a team of his student rope jumpers to receive a special Heart Association award at its annual convention in Alexandria Oct. 17.

DeLugo said eight students in grades 1, 2, 5, 6, and 7, accompanied by two volunteer parents, will attend the convention to receive the award and to put on a display of rope jumping skills they have learned.

The Heart Association commended Windsor Oaks students not only for raising the most money in the state but also for having the highest percentage (98%) of collected pledges. In the Jump-A-Thon, teams of six students (and teachers) took turns jumping rope for three hours. Team members had secured pledges for each minute the team jumped.

Bridge Contract Awarded

The Virginia Bridge and Structure Company has been awarded the contract to build the Nawney's Creek Bridge for $169,000.85, the low bid of eight. The engineer's estimate was $155,638.45.

Virginia Beach City Council Monday afternoon subject to a resolution of pending claims against Contractor's Paving Company which is listed as a subcontractor for the project.

Council Honors Carey

R. Lee Carey was honored Monday afternoon for his service on the Virginia Beach Personnel Board from 1968 to 1981.

Mayor Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr. presented Carey with a framed resolution expressing the city's appreciation and Personnel Director Mrs. Phyllis Millette also expressed her appreciation and presented a flower arrangement to Mrs. Carey.

EDITORIAL

Election Summary

Governor

The monsoon of political rhetoric has about blown itself out. Most of the dialogue has done more to clog the issues and inflame passions than to inform the voter, who must decide between Chuck Robb and Marshall Coleman. Regular readers of this column for the past six weeks have endured strong opinion, but this too, is over with these few final observations.

If Robb wins, if he becomes governor of Virginia, it will be a victory of national significance. He will begin immediately to run for vice president in 1984. Walter Mondale, Ted Kennedy and Tip O'Neill will be happy. Lady Bird and Lynda Bird will move into the governor's mansion in Richmond. Virginia government won't change much except that Robb will use the governor's broad appointive power to put his political supporters into over 3,000 state positions. This will influence basic philosophy in Richmond and around the state for years to come, long after Robb has moved on.

If Coleman wins, he will not owe his victory to a strange assortment of special interest groups. He will be his own man. He is qualified and prepared, having served in the House of Delegates, the State Senate, and as Attorney General. Virginia government will continue with the basic essentials of past state administrations. Ronald Reagan will be happy. The governor's mansion in Richmond will not be a symbol of anything fancy, but a place where a sensible man lives and does business in tune with the national administration's economic recovery program.

Virginia wins if the voter carefully considers immediate and future implications of this election and makes the right decision. The issues have been discussed, opinions have been given, and now we hope for a beautiful November day next Tuesday and a big vote for Marshall Coleman.

Lieutenant Governor

Dick Davis of Portsmouth has an outstanding record of public and business accomplishment. As a two-term mayor of his hometown, he earned the respect of people representing all political persuasions.

Davis understands cooperation between Richmond and local governments. He says, "At a time when tremendous cutbacks in federal funding will be facing our state and local governments and block grants will be the funding alternatives, I am the only candidate experienced in administering these programs."

During a long career in the Tidewater business community, Davis gained a reputation as a fair and honest man. He is a strong advocate of strengthening Virginia's conflict of interests laws. With his record of hard work and leadership, Dick Davis can be expected to serve with distinction as lieutenant governor.

Attorney General

If you want to get serious about crime, then now is the time to get smart. Because we have all been incredibly dumb. Too many criminals get off easy, our police officers don't have enough support and the criminal justice system is full of opportunities for criminals to escape punishment.

Wyatt Durrette knows we can - and must - get serious about crime. He says, "As your Attorney General I intend to lead a tough, determined battle to curb crime in Virginia. I can make a difference by tightening the enforcement of our laws and stiffening the penalties for criminals."

Virginians are entirely dissatisfied with laws now in effect and the General Assembly appears willing to make changes. Durrette, an experienced courtroom attorney and six-year House of Delegates veteran, has developed a responsible program to protect Old Dominion citizens. Those who know Wyatt Durrette, know he will do what he says. He should have the opportunity. - H.B.

Vocabulary Blemishes Sage

I have never met Ledger Star reporter Connie Sage, but if I do, hopefully her personal manners will exceed her limited vocabulary.

The Sun contacted Connie Sage to determine why she did not give credit to Corporal Thomas Lewis, Norfolk, who was involved in a recent Virginia Beach drug bust she covered. (See story, this issue). She could have responded civilly as did the other reporters. But, when questioned on the matter, she became increasingly defensive, un-settled, and enunciated vulgarities as eloquently, and fluently as Richard Nixon did during his pre-Watergate days. Journalistic ethics prohibit the Sun's publication of the full text of her rude comments.

Let me be the first to note that my language is not always fit for Sunday service, yet on a daily basis, particularly in a professional capacity, it is wise to remember that continued swearing is not befitting any professional writer, be it male or female, who depends on sensitivity, and public cooperation in the pursuit of their livelihood.

Connie Sage did not offend The Sun with her unladylike language; that's all in a day's work at the office. What Connie Sage does offend is the proud reputation and image of professional reporters and editors everywhere. Newsroom talk can get pretty base, but let's be careful not to let the crude language escape.

Letters To The Editor

Vote For Honest Evans

Editor:

Appearing before the Sandbridge Civic League, Paul Sciortino, commenting on his presence at the infamous late night meeting of two developers, six City Council members, the city manager, and his two brothers, ruled to be an illegal meeting, states he attended the meeting as a private citizen "I was not covered by the Freedom of Information Act."

At the time, Paul Sciortino was the City of Virginia Beach Deputy Commonwealth Attorney, as a lawyer, serving in this capacity, his very presence at this meeting was a flagrant disregard of the public trust placed in him.

In an article by David Chandler, Ledger-Star, Saturday March 3, 1979, the very first paragraph reads:

"Sealed court depositions show that Paul Sciortino, a Virginia Beach prosecutor, revealed details of an organized crime investigation in the early '70s to his traffic patrolman brother."

Thus, the basis for the "infamous" late night meeting! A person of this caliber wants to be Commonwealth's Attorney?

Voters of Virginia Beach - beware! Vote for a man of honesty and integrity - Andre Evans!

Vivian C. Hitchcock,
Virginia Beach

Evans Knows The Role

It is likely that Andre Evans will retain his Virginia Beach commonwealth's attorney seat after next Tuesday's election. There is no reason for him to be replaced.

Evans, the 11 year Democratic incumbent, stands fast by his prior prosecution record, and accomplishments while in office. He has indeed proven himself a competent municipal administrator and prosecuting attorney. The only one who has found great disfavor with Evans' performance is his former deputy attorney Paul A. Sciortino, the Republican contender for the high paying office.

Evans knows the role of commonwealth's attorney must be maintained both on and off the stage. A very important fact that Sciortino has forgotten in the past.

Virginia Beach should not be afraid of change, or to change. But to take a man from office after serving 11 good years would be a change not in the best interest of Virginia Beach.

Letter Attacked By Reader

Editor:

I read the article written by Mrs. Wilson of Virginia Beach, she talks about the plane crash on the USS Nimitz on May 26. She goes on to say that the pilot had a high dosage of antihistamines in his body, so it is automatically drug-related.

I'm sorry but it is not always drug-related. If you will go to a drug store you will find hundreds of medicines with antihistamines in them that are very legal. So it is possible that the man was sick while flying the plane, and had taken a little to much medicine to get well faster or by accident.

So, let's not jump to conclusions before we find out the facts.

Of course, though if there's a ship with dope on it and a plane crashes on the ship, automatically people think the pilot was on dope of some type.

I am not trying to make people think that drugs are good because they are not, but let's not always think that drugs are the first answer to someone's death or other incidents.

THERE ARE SEVEN NEW FACES IN THE BEACH DELEGATES RACE. THIS IS ONE THAT'S AN OLD HAND.

Dealing with a state legislature always looks easy. But, as most new delegates find, it's not as easy as it looks. So, many of them spend their first year learning the ropes, and not doing much in the way of legislating.

Bob Simpson can bring respected experience to the Beach delegation. As an Assistant Attorney General of Virginia, he was actively involved in the legislative process. He understands what it takes to get a bill passed, and what it takes to have one defeated. But legislative experience isn't all Bob Simpson has to offer. He's developed a successful private law practice in only a few short years. He has a distinguished record in our country's armed forces. He's a family man and knows the value of strong family relationships in today's unsettled world. And he has served in numerous civic, church and professional organizations. In short, Bob Simpson is the new candidate who won't be new to Richmond. And experience in Richmond is something the Beach needs right now.

A special message to the area voters who will determine the character, direction, and quality of Virginia's leadership for the next four years:

Five reasons we believe Lieutenant Governor Charles S. Robb is clearly the one right choice for governor in this November's election.

VIRGINIANS FOR ROBB

1. Charles Robb will protect our conservative fiscal traditions.

He has promised to work cooperatively with the conservative General Assembly to avoid tax increases, but he has courageously refused to seek votes by pledging to veto any new tax. Charles Robb understands that the full impact of reduced federal revenues, inflation, and high interest rates cannot be responsibly predicted now for the next four years.

2. Charles Robb will be an outstanding spokesman for more new jobs.

He's ready to go to work for 50,000 new jobs a year, with a remarkable 120-point plan for economic development. And with his national prominence in the business community, he'll see that American industry gets Virginia's message—so Virginians get the jobs.

3. Charles Robb will fight rising crime rates with 60 tough proposals.

His comprehensive program to promote swift, sure punishment includes provisions for stiffer criteria for bail; tougher sentences for repeat offenders; a crackdown on criminals using firearms; and intensified prosecution of hard drug dealers.

4. Charles Robb will continue to support every Virginian's right to work.

He has consistently upheld our right-to-work law, both as a fundamental freedom and an important new-business incentive. He has just as consistently opposed collective bargaining for public employees. And he will stand by both of those positions as governor.

5. Charles Robb will provide the leadership which is the real issue of this campaign.

In spite of strong efforts by Charles Robb's opponent to turn the election into a referendum on President Reagan and ride into office on the President's coattails, the only real issue is leadership for Virginia. One of two men will be governor for the next four years. That is what this election is all about.

If you share our concern for the possible outcome of this year's election, we urge you join us and support the one candidate who is honestly in step with the traditions, the hopes, and the needs of Virginia today: Charles Robb, for governor, November 3!

✓ Beach College Night Set

Virginia Beach City Schools annual College Night is scheduled for Thursday, Nov. 12 from 4 to 8 p.m., at the Virginia Beach Dome. Scheduling of this college information program is timely as it is being held during National Career Guidance Week. The theme for National Career Guidance Week, Nov. 8 through 14, is "Explore for the Future."

The supervisor of guidance, Mrs. Frances Hudgins, 1 her steering committee members have planned a program involving approximately 125 colleges, universities, military academies, and technical schools.

Students interested in financial aid information are urged to attend one of the financial aid sessions at 4:30, 6 or 7 p.m. College financial aid officers are coordinating this part of the program.

The atmosphere at College Night will be informal; each representative will have a display table containing catalogs and brochures. Students may request application forms and question the representatives.

School counselors believe college-bound juniors and their parents should consider this college information program a "must." All secondary students are encouraged to visit the college/career center in their school to research career materials in preparation for College Night.

Counselors urge students to know their career interests, and know which schools offer appropriate programs in these career choices. Questions related to entrance requirements, curricula, location, size and costs of attending particular schools would be appropriate for the representatives. Preparation, prior to Nov. 12, will insure a profitable experience at College Night.

Referee Stopped Fight In 11th

Bubba Bloodies Jackson, But Loses

By Greg Goldfarb,
Sun Editor

Bubba Walters fought the mighty California full contact karate champion evenly through the first 10 rounds. But in the 11th and final round, Walters exploded with an intensity awesome to behold.

In that grueling three-minute round, before 4,000 cheering fans in the Windy City, Walters unleashed his fury against opponent Howard Jackson, from Los Angeles, who now holds the World Karate Association welterweight title belt.

Walters assaulted Jackson 224 times with punches, and scored with 164 kicks. Jackson threw 89 punches and 89 kicks. Walters averaged 16 kicks a round, compared to other fighters who average eight to 10 kicks a round.

Walters lost the fight, taped by NBC in the Rosemont Horizon, by a unanimous decision of the judges. Jackson, at one time ranked 15th in the world as a boxer, left the ring after fighting Walters, his mouth full of blood, and a swollen face.

In the 11th, Walters, dressed in gold warm-up pants streaked up the legs with a flaming red lightning bolt, knew this would be an all-or-nothing round for him. He let his jabs sting Jackson's face; and his roundhouse kicks kissed Jackson's head repeatedly, as black karate belts danced around the fighters' waists like vipers ready to strike.

Walters hurt Jackson badly in the 11th. So bad, the referee had to burst in at the bell to separate the two warriors, to possibly save Jackson's life and his belt.

Spectators hissed as the judges' decision was announced declaring Jackson the winner. Walters, his family, and trainer Jerry Martin were shocked at the decision, surely feeling Walters had defeated Jackson.

But in retrospect, Walters realized why he didn't win the contest.

"The way the judges were scoring this fight," Walters, a Virginia Beach fireman and Chesapeake resident, said, "scoring was based on aggressiveness more than the actual number of kicks and punches landed. There's a new rule change in the works, however, which will allow a fighter one point per round if he throws the most number of kicks. Jackson kept coming, even though I hit him three times to every one time he hit me."

Walters said Jackson was ineffective as a kicker, whose only dangerous weapon as a fighter is a hook-punch.

"That's why I kept a front kick in his stomach all the time," Walters said. "I must have thrown a hundred of them. They wore him down, and kept him away from me. But next time he'll be more aware of them. I'm sure."

Walters said he hit Jackson several times, after which Jackson "just leaned back with a dazed look on his face," but Jackson never went down. Jackson did give Walters on low kick.

"He kicked me in the leg," Walters said. "That was the only shot I took that hurt; and that didn't hurt until the next day."

Walters said without a doubt, "Jackson never hurt me once. I have harder, tougher practice sessions at the Deep Creek gym than he gave me."

Walters and Jackson both wore 8 ounce gloves for the event, which, according to Walters, featured Jackson sorely lacking in some fighting departments.

"He did not meet the minimum kick requirements in rounds eight and 10," Walters said, "and he averaged only eight kicks a round, which is a technical minimum. Also, he only landed three punches in the last round."

Walters, ranked as one of the top 10 full contact karate fighters in the world, said Jackson will retire from the ring in less than a year. Walters expects to have another shot at the title belt by that time.

"Jackson fights for money," Walters, who received $1,000 for the fights and expenses said, "and if the money is there he will probably fight me again." Jackson received between $2,500 and $3,000 for his efforts with Walters.

Walters said that before his fight with Jackson, locker room rumors circulated about Walters being a "chump" from Virginia with 100 to one odds against him. But after Walters watched Jackson stagger and walk rubbery-legged back to his corner, he said he's sure Jackson's camp has considerable more respect for the 31 year old fighter than before the fight.

"I haven't even reached my peak yet," Walters said with a boyish grin and a gleam in his eye, "and Jackson's career is going downhill. He isn't getting any better, and the next time we fight, the champ is going down!"

Walters, while waiting for a rematch with Jackson, is planning a fight against Ismael Robles, from Gavelston, Texas, on Dec. 5. Robles is ranked fifth in the world. Walters will also fight on Saturday, Nov. 21, in the Norfolk arena against Lynchburg's Ric Toward.

"It's A Lie"—Coleman

By Greg Goldfarb,
Sun Editor

She said her mother told her never to use the word "lie." But she couldn't help it.

"It's a big lie," said Nikl Coleman over recent radio ads alleging Attorney General Marshall Coleman, her husband and Republican candidate for the Virginia governor's office, assisted in the early prison release of some convicted drug smugglers.

Coleman, following her recent address to the Virginia Beach Optimists Club at the Commodore Country Club, explained the circumstances leading to the ad's message, paid for by Democratic candidate for the governor's mansion, Lieutenant Governor Chuck Robb.

"Someone from the prison where the convicted smugglers were, called Marshall's office and said they had a release order for the prisoners," Coleman said, "and wanted his office to advise them of the proper procedure in going through with the release. It is Marshall's office's responsibility to answer the inquiry, but as soon as Marshall heard of the request, he immediately protested the release with the Virginia Supreme Court."

Coleman said there "is absolutely no truth" to the fact that her husband assisted the release, adding, "I want to know who called for the prisoners' release? Those men were sentenced from eight to 21 years. The Democratic judge said he released them, acting on an opinion from a former Democratic attorney general, who said the judge had the right to release the prisoners. But why did the judge order the release in the first place? Marshall filed a brief, charging that the judge had no authority to order the release."

Construction Begins

Virginia Beach Students Get Two New Gyms

Two elementary school gymnasiums, listed in the Virginia Beach Capital Budget only among projects contemplated for beyond 1983, are under construction.

How these projects could be considered before those in the city's five-year budget became a matter of concern to City Council Monday afternoon during a revision of the charter bond appropriations.

The gyms, at the College Park and Linkhorn Park schools, are being financed with approximately $700,000 leftover from construction of the Providence Elementary School and the Rosemont Elementary School and from funds ($281,000) set aside for the Princess Anne High School remodeling project. The Princess Anne project had been dropped because it was determined the cost would be close to $3 million.

Councilman Reid Ervin was especially disturbed because inclusion of the gyms would have defeated the bond issue. He said the gym construction raises a question of credibility. "I have the appearance we're circumventing the will of the voters," he said.

Councilwoman Barbara Henely and Reba McClanahan questioned that gyms should be built at all when classrooms are supposed to be needed desperately.

As a result of the discussion which started at the informal session and continued into the formal session of Council, Mayor Dr. J. Henry McCoy will invite the School Board Chairman Dr. Roy A. Woods and Superintendent of Schools E. E. Brickell to meet with Council.

Friday's Council action approved by a vote of 10-1 the transfer of $2.9 million from city projects to the new Cox High school because the school's completion schedule had been moved ahead by one year.

The money came from seven engineering and road projects—Princess Anne Road, Phase II, Stumpy Lake Hydraulic Study and drainage, Chesapeake Beach Drainage, Salem Road, Lynnhaven Parkway, Lake Banbury outfall drainage and Lynnhaven Road.

Even without construction of the gyms, City Manager George L. Hanbury said the transfer would be needed to solve the city's cash flow problem. The gyms were not included in the city's original list of projects, however.

Hanbury said that if the timing for the construction of Cox followed schedule, the transfer would not have been needed.

Henley remarked that "we have been told we have the highest class size in the state and we're building gymnasiums."

Hanbury said that the city is not recommending more spending for schools. In January the school appropriations will be reduced by the amount they are gaining now.

McClanahan said she understood that the city was not going to construct any more buildings. "I call a gymnasium a building."

Hanbury said that the buildings referred to in Council's policy were city buildings, not school buildings. He said school building money is separate.

She also asked why the city was not using Literary Fund loans at three percent.

Finance Director Giles Dodd said that unlike other municipalities Virginia Beach has had easier access to the bond market and that the last time the city inquired about a loan several years ago, it was told that the needs of the city were larger than available funds, that the fund was intended to help some of the smaller communities.

Dodd said however, that with the bond buyers' index at 12.53 percent interest, the School Board is looking into Literary loans more diligently. Also, Superintendent of Schools Dr. E. E. Brickell is making an effort to have the maximum loan per project increased from $1 million to $3 million.

"Henley said at first she could not vote in favor of the transfer ordinance because of the gymnasiums."

McClanahan said that when the 1982 budget is discussed, "we should say 'not again.'"

Hanbury said that the School Board has made a commitment to the contractors which commits the city. Council was in fact forced to approve the transfer ordinance.

Gym Funding Questioned By Council

McClanan said, "decisions were made somewhere we had nothing to do with." "The whole thing is a situation of procedure,"

Henley said. "To vote for it is to rubber stamp a decision made at some point and I don't know how we can appropriate for what is not allocated." Ervin said that the gyms are not in the Capital Improvements projects and caused one bond issue to be rescinded.

Henley said if the $700,000 is not used for the gym projects they could be used for some of the "bumped" projects which have a higher priority. She said the gyms were pulled ahead of all the other projects.

Hanbury said the schools have been adding gymnasiums to elementary schools for the past four or five years.

Councilman Patrick L. Standing said that the School Board would have used these excess funds as they have others without even coming before Council except for the cash flow problem with Cox.

Ervin said he didn't think the city should use surplus funds for these purposes.

Henley said that when Council approved the original projects it was on good faith. She said the procedure should be changed.

Ervin said that the School Board went ahead and committed the construction. "Somewhere along the line someone has to make a decision to build or not to build."

Vice Mayor Harold Heischouer said that "If the three projects contribute $700,000 the excess should go to the next priority."

"What happens if we don't approve it?" asked Ervin.

Councilman John A. Baun said the Council is forced to approve it but that Council should also deliver "some sharp note" about the procedure.

Hanbury said the problem speaks to the greater considerations of the merger committee—the Council School Board committee studying ways the two bodies could merge operations. He said construction projects need to be better coordinated.

Hanbury said that if the city had learned about the gyms earlier, they could have been stopped.

He said that he wrote a letter in July to Brickell instructing him not to enter into new contracts after the two gyms were already contracted for. He said that Brickell intends to appear before the School Board go ahead with the schools.

Hanbury said that he did not think that any of the delayed road projects would be held up appreciably. "We've got financial commitment to what commitments the School Board has made."

"Can't we get them to build classrooms first?" Ervin asked "Build classrooms and cut out everything else."

Hanbury replied, "I've given him the word by letter and he's going to come see you. You can give him the word."

"Now is the time to have a meeting with the School Board and Dr. Brickell, Ervin said.

The only obligations the city is not responsible for would be those made after the July letter, Hanbury said.

If the transfers are not made and the bills not paid, the city's bond rating could be affected, Heischouer said.

McClanan cast the dissenting vote.

Central Library Costs

Publicity over the possible high cost of a Central Library site has helped the city by attracting more property owners interested in selling. City Manager George L. Hanbury said Monday afternoon.

The competition will tend to lower the price of land which has been estimated to range from $60,000 to $80,000 an acre in the Virginia Beach Boulevard area where the city wants to locate the library, Hanbury thinks.

The anticipated price has elicited criticism from Council members who believe that more than $800,000 is too much to spend on any site for a public building.

Of the total, $625,000 was included in the 1982 Revenue Sharing proposal, but was deleted from the list of projects when Council approved the proposal for spending $6,275,000. The money was kept in reserve, however.

Also available for the site are $200,000 in bond money and $40,000 allocated for a Great Neck library which will not be built. The Great Neck area would be served by the Central Library.

Initial construction of the library includes a 90,000 square foot structure with a potential vertical or horizontal expansion of 120,000 square feet.

Hanbury said that a site of seven to 10 acres is needed to handle the expansion with the parking required.

Council indicated some disagreement between the Library Board and the manager over the site size.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf said that two board members who spoke to her said only five acres would be needed and that their concern was spending $800,000 odd dollars just to buy land.

Publicity over the high price of land was good for the city, Hanbury said, because people with large acreages on Virginia Beach Boulevard have come forward.

John Williams, who has a business at the Farmers Market, also questioned the expenditure in the Revenue Sharing budget on Newtown Road from Baker Road to Northampton Boulevard. He said that the construction would not solve the congestion problem on Newtown Road, because the bottlenecks would not be removed.

New Restaurant Opens

Captain D's Seafood Restaurant has opened its fifth area store and first Virginia Beach location at 1153 S. Lynnhaven Parkway. It becomes the twelfth food service unit under the management of Shoney's, Inc., of Tidewater.

The building is a free standing unit with seating for 84 people and provides a drive-thru service window for takeout orders.

A new stamp, bearing the letter "C" instead of a denomination is on sale at the Virginia Beach Post Office and all postal branches and stations, Postmaster J. T. Crosswhite, Jr. has announced.

The stamp's monetary value matches the new 20-cent First-Class rate which goes into effect at 12:01 a.m., Sunday, Nov. 1. Rates for other classes of mail will become effective at the same time.

Brown and white in color, the new stamp features an eagle with the legend "US Postage" beneath it. The letter "C" appears beside the eagle.

Also included in the stamp's design are the words "Domestic Mail" to remind mailers that the "C" issue cannot be used on international mail.

Mail destined for foreign countries and bearing "C" stamps will be returned to senders, Postmaster Crosswhite said.

Approximately 1,500,000 of the new regular stamp are on hand at the main post office and all branches and stations, according to Postmaster Crosswhite.

"This is an ample supply to meet the demands of our customers," he said. "We just hope the public will take advantage of the opportunity to begin buying the stamps now and not waiting until the new rates go into effect."

Broken Things

He sees each fledgling sparrow fall.
He knows small broken wings.
He hears each anguished, plaintive call
Of tiny broken things.

He sees red velvet petals crushed
'Neath hasty, careless feet
Which often, in their hurried rush,
Tramp over roses sweet.

He knows each lonely crippled child
Who bravely laughs and sings
Who longs to run and romp in fields
And know glad job it brings.

He knows each heartache, ev'ry trail
Of all of Adam's race.
He bore cruel Cross and does not fail
To save us by His grace.

On Calvary's Tree—fierce nails applied,
Pierced through by angry sword—
Heartbroken, scourged and crucified
Was Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Of Him God's whole creation sings;
He understandeth broken things.

Andre Evans Believes Career Criminals Have Their Place.

When Andre Evans established the Major Offenders Bureau, it was only one more way that he's been making life tough for criminals in Virginia Beach.

"MOB" cracks down on the career criminal, with experienced prosecutors making sure that such heavy-duty offenders end up behind prison walls.

Where they belong.

HE BELIEVES SPECIAL CRIMES DEMAND SPECIAL ATTENTION.

Don't think that any brand of crime gets off easy in the courts of Virginia Beach. Because Andre Evans has established other special divisions to match every twist of the criminal mind.

Crimes of violence, narcotics, welfare fraud and juvenile crime are targets, as well as white-collar crime and consumer fraud. (Andre Evans established the first prosecutor's Consumer Protection Program in Tidewater.)

Maybe that's why his prosecutors are so successful. His office won 9 out of 10 — in thousands of court appearances last year.

HE BELIEVES VICTIMS DESERVE BETTER TREATMENT THAN CRIMINALS.

Andre Evans established a special Victim/Witness

Assistance Office to help the "forgotten people" in the criminal justice system.

It's the only program in the whole system designed to help tax-paying, law-abiding citizens.

Andre Evans was also an outspoken advocate in the fight to gain compensation for victims. Today, the state pays for injuries suffered in a crime.

HE'S A PROSECUTOR, NOT A POLITICIAN.

Andre Evans is more than able, he's incredibly honest. As the Virginian-Pilot put it in 1977, "Mr. Evans has been scrupulously unapproachable for partiality."

He won't trade favors for votes. And he won't take orders from anyone.

Such integrity is probably the reason his fellow lawyers made him president of the Virginia Beach Bar and the State Commonwealth's Attorney's Association — among other honors.

Vote November 3 to keep tough, honest and inventive law enforcement in Virginia Beach.
